NEW YORK HAS NEW HONORS FOR ACE

LINDBERGH FORCED TO USE SUBSTITUTE PLANE FOR JOURNEY

Trans-Atlantic Ship Out Of Order—Strong Wind Bolws

WASHINGTON, June 13.—With a wave of his hand and a cheery grin, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh sent a speedy army pursuit plane into the air at Bolling Field at 8:54 o'clock this morning—bound for New York and another tremendous homecoming celebration.

A last minute bit of hard luck forced the youthful flyer to abandon his trans-Atlantic plane "The Spirit of St. Louis" on the field, and take an army plane for the two-hour journey.

The "St. Louis" didn't tune up right when mechanics started the motor. The trouble was a faulty cylinder, a "sweaty cylinder" they call it in the air service, and upon the advice of brother flyers at the field, Lindbergh reluctantly decided to accept a substitute plane it was a keen disappointment to him, for he had his heart set upon returning to New York in the same famous "bus" he left there in three weeks ago on the flight to Paris.

"With five million people waiting for you up there, you'd better not take chances on a forced landing or not getting there," they told him.

"Yes. Guess you're right," said "Lindy," and reluctantly agreed to the shift.

The substitute was trundled out, a shiny little Curtis C-1 type, painted black and yellow. The fuselage bore a picture of the dome of the capitol and the numerals "34" on each side. The under-surface of the wings bore "U. S. Army."

Lindbergh climbed in, and began to spin the motor. A small group of army flyers clung on to the sides of the cockpit, giving him suggestions as to the controls and the "moods" of the little racer. Lindbergh nodded quickly.

He shoved off in the teeth of a strong northeast wind, which had the flags about the field whipping stiffly in the early morning sunlight. The strength of the breeze may slow up his flying time to New York, although he was confident he would make it in two hours anyway. The distance is approximately 230 miles.

The field was muddy from last night's heavy rains, but it was accomplished without mishap either to "Lindy" or the escorting planes. The trim little Curtis taxied out, headed into the wind, and began to travel. Like a pert bird she started skimming head-on into the wind, gathering speed as the motor raced. The tail went up as she straightened to her work, and then he pulled the stick backward and ...ared aloft in a terrific burst of ...eed.

Two score planes accompanied ... into the air, the staccato roar... of their motors drowning out ... cheers of several thousand ...tchers, who despite elaborate ...itary and police precautions had ...hered at the field to see the get...ay.

...he first group of single-seaters ...ceded "Lindy" into the air, and ... first observation group, com...ed of two-seaters, followed ...n.

Lindbergh bade goodbye to Washington with a flourish, and he gave experienced flyers at the field a final thrill by his daring take-off. As his landing wheels left the ground at the end of the run, he "pulled the stick into his stomach," as they say slangily in the air service and zoomed straight up into the sky. But the little Curtis motor was sturdy and she never faltered. He banked over, raced nto greater altitude, did a loop, and circled the field twice while the two-seaters were getting off the ground in groups of three.

"Wow," said a pair of army pilots who witnessed his breath-taking get away.

He circled the field until his escorting planes were all up and going. Then he turned the nose of the little racer northeast by the compass, and roared away. In five minutes he was but a speck in the sun-shot haze of the early morning, and in ten minutes he was out of sight.

Commander Richard E. Byrd, the North Pole flyer, took off from the field in an amphibian naval plane soon after "Lindy" soared away.

After the departure, it developed that several days work probably will be required before the "Spirit of St. Louis" is again ready to fly. The engineering officer of the field reported that a cam follower (CO) was cracked, swollen and stuck. While it will not be necessary to tear down the engine to make the repairs, one cylinder will have to be removed entirely, it was said.

WILL USE PLANE

CLEVELAND, O., June 13.—The Thompson Products Company Inc., has purchased an airplane to be used for "hurry-up" trips of officers of the concern and for "special deliveries." Other planes will be purchased later, according to E. G. Thompson, vice president.

CROWDS GREET FLYERS IN GERMANY

NEW YORK OPENS ITS ARMS TO YOUNG AIR HERO

"Hello, Broadway, here I come;

HONOR ACCORDED TO TRANS-OCEAN ACES WHEREVER THEY GO

Chamberlin And Levine Get Taste Of What Lindy Enjoyed

BADEN BADEN, Germany, June 13.—Although incognito, Clarence Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine are unable to escape adulation.

The two American flyers who ended their trans-ocean jump in Germany a week ago today, are here today for a rest with but little prospect of getting it.

Throughout their journey from Berlin their train was greeted by hundreds gathered at the stations and the conductor was forced to give them an extra compartment to hold the floral tributes hurled on the train.

At Karlsruhe the Association of Ex-Army Pilots presented Chamberlin and Levine with the insignia of their association and made them honorary members, thus, Chamberlin is the only former allied pilot to have the insignia of the German war pilots.

On arrival at Baden Baden the two flyers were taken by storm, 3,000 ardent admirers cheering them and the mayor and members of the city council extending an official welcome to them. The crowds carried the two fliers to their automobile upon their shoulders.

The Hotel Stefaine, where the two fliers registered, has suddenly become almost an American hostelry for in the past twenty-four hours more than 150 Americans have registered there.

Chamberlin today took account of cash on hand. He started for Europe with $11.60 and he has given away $1.60 as souvenir coins, but he still has $10, having found it impossible to spend a penny in Germany.

Chamberlin and Levine have decided to return to Berlin by commercial plane on Wednesday and will then fly to Bremen on Thursday to meet their wives.

Chamberlin received his first kiss from a German fraulein here. At the reception following his arrival an attractive girl, dressed in the quaint costume of the local peasant, forced her way to the side of the flyer, implanted a resounding smack and vanished. Chamberlin gestured helplessly in great embarrassment.

NINETEEN HURT AS BUS STRIKES CARS

PHILADELPHIA, June 13.—Nineteen persons were injured today when a Philadelphia-bound bus collided with a number of machines in trying to avoid a collision with a taxicab on the Delaware River bridge. The bus skidded and slid into a long line of about seventy-five cars, shaking up scores of persons. Six machines were damaged badly, one car bursting into flames.

John Bryan, bus driver, of this city, was arrested on a reckless driving charge.

DIES SUDDENLY

NEWARK, O., June 13.—Somers Lee, 65, ill since last January, died here of heart disease, while sitting with his wife in a downtown confectionery.

WATROUS WINS FAME

OAKMOUNTAIN, Pa., June 13—Al Watrous, veteran of many golf tournaments, held the Indian sign today on the other 149 contenders for the national open crown. Al made a hole in one.

Watrous was playing with Walter Hagen against Johnny Farrell and Jimmy Johnston, when he sunk the pellet with his tee shot. It happened on the thirteenth hole which is surrounded by bunkers and traps.

Watrous took a mighty cut at the ball it came to earth six inches from the cup and rolled in. The thirteenth is a 164-yard hole.

GOTHAM ROARS HUGE WELCOME AS "LINDY" ARRIVES IN HARBOR

Guns Boom, Whistles Shriek And 16,000 Police Fail To Keep Order As Flyer Returns To Metropolis As Air Hero

NEW YORK, June 13.—Aflame with color and burstin... with enthusiasm, New York today roared a tumultuous wel... come to Charles A. Lindbergh, who three weeks and thr... days ago blazed a glorious trail through the air from Ne... York to Paris.

"Lindy!"

That was the affectionate greeting roared from millio... of throats. Again and again, in thunderous volume, th... huge throngs stretching from the Battery to Central Par... shouted that one word in a hysterical frenzy.

Guns boomed, harbor vessels shrieked, factory whistl... blew, automobile horns honked and people went wild with a... miration as Colonel Lindbergh made his triumphal entry in... the city.

Nothing comparable to it has been witnessed in Ne... York since the return of the famous Twenty-seventh divisi... from the World War.

Even Admiral George Dewey's reception upon his return from Manila Bay in 1899 was surpassed and certainly the welcome was as great as that accorded General John J. Pershing when he returned victoriously from the World War.

Bedlam broke loose when "Lindy" in an army amphibian plane, descended gracefully in the gleaming waters of the harbor.

The big guns from Governors Island and Fort Wadsworth boomed their greeting; whistles and sirens on the hundreds of craft of all sorts, from majestic ocean liners to tiny tugs, that choked the harbor, were unloosed and from the green slopes of the shore, thousands of people let forth a mighty roar—"Lindy."

"Lindy" smiled shyly. He had expected a reception, but nothing quite like this. He waved to crowds lining the decks of the flag bedecked vessels. He was soon transferred from the cockpit of the city's official boat, the Macom, which was brightly dressed in flags from stem to stern.

Bands aboard the boats played stirring tunes as the Macom with the famous guest on deck, steamed up the harbor through a lane of several hundred vessels to pier A, at the battery.

Airplanes droned overhead in the bright sunlight, sweet music to "Lindy's" ears. He looked upward frequently, as the flyers executed fancy formations.

Fifty thousand people were massed around Battery Park when the Macom landed "Lindy" at the Battery. A hundred brightly groomed police horses, bearing mounted officers, pranced excitedly while their riders strove to control the straining crowds.

More than 1,000 policemen formed a solid cordon in the two blocks between pier A and the elevated station. From there to City Hall Park, where New York was to officially claim Colonel Lindbergh as her own, thousands of other policemen were stationed intervals of ten feet. Half of t... entire police force of 16,000 m... were on duty somewhere along t... line of march.

Preceded by an escort of 10,0... troops, "Lindy" was taken ... through lower Broadway, betwe... dense throngs of people, to Ci... Hall, where his mother, Mrs. Eva... geline Lodge Lindbergh, was awa... ing to view the official recepti... of her son by the city.

YOUTH CRUSHED AS TRACTION CAR HITS AUTO AT CROSSING

Boy Loses Toe On Left Foot—Jump Fails To Save Him

Herbert Bowermaster, 14, Locust St., was injured so severely when a northbound Springfield and Xenia traction car his an auto near the municipal waterworks plant, north of Old Town on the Springfield Pike, about 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, that it was necessary for surgeons at McClellan Hospital to amputate the big toe on the left foot.

The youth, who is a cripple, attempted to leap from the car to safety but jumped in front of the approaching traction and was wedged between the auto and the front end of the traction car.

John Roberts, 35, also of Locust St., the driver, leaped to safety from the other side of the car, when it stalled on the crossing.

Bowermaster suffered injuries about the head consisting of cuts and bruises and both feet were bruised and lacerated. He was taken to McClellan Hospital by Frank Wagner, colored, Dunbar Ave., Dayton, where his injuries were treated by Dr. B. R. McClellan.

Bowermaster, with his father, Roy, two brothers and Roberts was fishing along the Little Miami River, and Roberts and young Bowermaster returned to Xenia to obtain a bucket in which to gather wild strawberries.

In returning to the river, the motor stalled as the machine was being driven across the car tracks in front of the northbound traction.

Peter Shagin, motorcycle policeman, investigated the accident.

Tonsil Politics?

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1927

WASHINGTON, June 13. — There was more than the usual "mother touch" in the meeting at the White House between Evangeline Lindbergh and Grace Coolidge. Both women vaulted into the world's eye in the midst of lives that had strangely similar and humble origins. Perhaps the circumstance which the first lady of the land and Mrs. Lindbergh find most common to them is that by profession each is a school teacher. Today one is mistress of the White House; the other, the most envied mother on earth.

Comparatively little is known of the teaching career of either of them. Since fame overtook her, less than three weeks ago, it has leaked out that Mrs. Lindbergh, who teaches chemistry in a Detroit high school, is extraordinarily proficient in that science. Women in the Washington congressional set, who knew Mrs. Lindbergh when her husband was in the house, have been heard in recent hours calling her an American Madame Curie. Mrs. Coolidge, preceding her marriage in 1905, taught lip-reading in

SHOOTING CLAIMS ONE; ANOTHER HURT

NEWARK, O., June 13.—Fred Paul, 40, is dead, and his wife, Anna, is reported dying at a local hospital with a bullet through her brain, as the result of a shooting at the home of Mrs. Paul's father here Sunday afternoon. The husband, who had been estranged and separated from the woman for three weeks, called at her father's home and urged a reconciliation. When his wife refused to return to him, he suddenly produced a pistol and shot her, then shot himself, dying instantly. The couple are the parents of six children, ranging in age from 3 to 16 years.

LINDBERGH GETS MEMBERSHIP IN AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY

Flyer Declares Hawaii Flight Should Not Be Attempted Without Proper Navigation—Talks "Shop" Among Brother Flyers

WASHINGTON, June 13.— Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was entered today into the ranks of the immortals of aviation and science. It was the final honor conferred upon him before he left for New York to receive the acclaim of the great metropolis for his epochal flight to Paris.

The greatest figures in modern-day aviation attended a breakfast in the flyer's honor early this morning, and saw conferred upon him a life membership in the National Aeronautical Association, which has been conferred upon but nine other men in history; and the Hubbard medal by the National Geographic Society, which is reserved for the trail-blazers in history and science.

President Porter H. Adams of the National Aeronautic Association told "Lindy" that he well deserved to take his place beside the nine other holders of life membership in the organization. They are Wilbur, Orville and Miss Katherine Wright, Samuel Pierpont Langley, Octave Chanute, John J. Montgomery, Charles M. Manley, Glenn Hammond Curtiss and Thomas A. Edison.

The youth who seemed ill at ease in the pomp of an official celebration, was at home at the breakfast, where he could talk aviation with those who understood. He beamed his appreciation when Commander Richard Byrd, whom he beat in the race to Paris, personally presented the Hubbard medal.

Among the leaders in aviation present were chiefs of the army and navy air crops, Donald Hall, designer of "The Spirit of St. Louis,"; Capt. A. C. Read and Capt. H. C. Richardson, trans-oceanic fliers; Lieut. L. C. Maitland, world speed record holder; Glenn Martin, pioneer aircraft builder; Robert Nungesser, brother of the misisng French ace; Lieut. Russell Maughan, "dawn-to-dusk" flier; George K. Burgress, lighter-than air-craft designer and Dwight Morrow of J. P. Morgan and Company, whose committee recomended the "five-year air program."

In a characteristically brief speech after receiving the Hubbard medal from the hands of Lt. Com. Richard E. Byrd, Lindbergh spoke of the practicability of a California-to-Hawaii flight. Such a trip is feasible, he said, but he warned against attempting it by dead-reckoning the course, as he did on his New York-to-Paris trip.

"Aviation is on a sound business basis today," the young flyer told the distinguished audience of aviation specialists," and it must continue to be developed along these lines. Trans-Atlantic flying will come, but it will require sound gorund organization and extended research and direction by experienced men.

"There is a great interest at this time in a flight from California to Hawaii. This flight is entirely practicable, it can be done and it will be done. However, I hope no one tries to make it on the principle of navigation I used in my New York-to-Paris flight.

"If I had struck the coast of Ireland 300 miles north or south of where I did I still could have made Paris, but had I deviated any more I could not have made it because I would have been short of fuel. If an attempt is made to reach Hawaii by dead reckoning and the plane is a few degrees off the course and misses the coast there are several thousand miles of Pacific Ocean beyond, with small chance of a pilot's being picked up.

"I believe the flight should be made by radio navigation, or the pilot should carry a navigator."

His brother flyers at the breakfast gave their youthful compatriot, a hearty greeting. In presenting the Hubbard medal to Lindbergh, Lt. Com. Byrd referred indirectly to his own plans for a flight to Paris, which are now understood to be in abeyance.

"We were hoping to ge to Paris ourselves,' 'said the naval flyer, "but Col. Lindbergh got there first, and we are all glad he did."

PLANE SIGHTED

RIO JANEIRO, June 13.—Fishermen arriving here today reported sighting what they believed to be an areoplane off the Macara Island. The plane may have been that of Major Sarmento Beires, Portuguese trans-Atlantic flyer who has been missing a week. Tugs have been dispatched to Marca Island to investigate.

EXPECT LENGEL WILL BE TRIED JULY 5; ARRAIGNED ON MONDAY

CANTON, O., June 13.—Former Chief of Police Saranus A. Lengel was to be arraigned here today, charged with first degree murder for alleged complicity in the slaying of Don R. Mellett, Canton publisher, last July.

Date of trial will probably be set for July 5, or shortly after that date.

Lengel was indicted, following submission of a statement to a special Stark County grand jury, by Floyd Streitenberger, ex-Canton detective, now serving a life term for his part in the crime.

Louis Mazer, Canton bootlegger, jointly indicted in the Mellett slaying, was to be taken to the penitentiary at Columbus either today or tomorrow. As reward for turning state's evidence, Mazer was allowed to plead guilty to manslaughter and sentenced to use his influence to effect Mazer's release at the end of five years, it was said.

Chicago Cooks, Rides, Sees, Thanks to Mr. Samuel Insull

By L. E. EARLY,
International Illustrated News Staff Correspondent.

CHICAGO (I-I-N)—Chicago cooks breakfast on Insull gas, rides to work on Insull cars, listens to Insull grand opera, reads by Insull electric lights and, say some, votes for candidates picked by Mr. Samuel Insull.

One of the most spectacular figures in American history has been brought to the fore again by a series of movements that ended with him in control of Chicago's street cars, bus lines and elevated railroads. For twenty years Chicago has talked about consolidation of traction. Figure after figure in politics and finance has attempted it. Recently the Aldermen spent $1,600,000 in trying to devise a plan, and just about the time that they had given up it was announced that Insull had made his own plan and put it into execution.

Insull came to America in 1880 as secretary to Thomas A. Edison. He was born in England, and had started out as an office boy, studying stenography in his spare time. He made the acquaintance of Edison's London manager, and he recommended that Edison send for the twenty-one-year-old youngster. Edison did.

Insull is a natural manager. He did everything for Edison, handling bond transactions and buying his neckties. He soon found himself organizing Edison's businesses, and in 1892 was made second vice-president of the General Electric Company.

A few months later he resigned to take over the presidency of a Chicago electric company. With this as a toehold he climbed rapidly up the heights he holds today. He extended his electric interests all over the middle West, he entered the gas business, taking over a Chicago company on the verge of bankruptcy and making it pay, he took over struggling electric lines and made them pay, and half a dozen other public utilities came under his control.

The Chicago Opera Company was losing money, and Insull was asked to save it. He Insullized it, and now it's one of the best financed companies in America.

As a contributor to political campaigns, Insull is one of nature's noblemen. Senatorial investigations have revealed that he's been very generous, contributing, in some instances to both sides of a single fight.

The public utility problem has always been linked with politics, and some see a connection between Insull's interest in politics and his latest coup. Whether there is or not, it's certain that Insull is now probably the most powerful man in the city today, and that he's unified the traction lines of Chicago, which Chicago has wanted for years.

COMPLETE SELL OUT OF ALUMNI BANQUET TICKETS FORESEEN

Figuratively speaking, "standing room only" will be available for the annual banquet of the Central High School Alumni Association Wednesday night at 6:15 at the school building, as indications point to complete "sell-out" of tickets for the affair.

A few tickets remain but these are being disposed of in short order and reservations should be made as quickly as possible to insure accommodations.

A short speaking program has been arranged in connection with the banquet, interspersed by group singing, after which the annual election of officers will be the closing feature.

Following the banquet, motion pictures will be shown in the auditorium by R. Hayes Hamilton, this city, travelogue lecturer. As an additional attraction, dancing will be enjoyed in the gymnasium with music supplied by a nine-piece supper club orchestra, that is making its appearance in Xenia for the first time.

RICH or POOR?

Young or old, all suffer from intestinal stasis (constipation). The cause can be told with one word—

That word is "Civilization"! It means "over-eating", "over-work", "worry" and "nerve enervation", wrong foods, wrong drinks! Not enough animal exercise, such as running, jumping, walking, climbing, etc.

The nervous force that should go to the bowel-nerves is taken by the brain or other parts of the body, to perform "civilized duties—or excesses."

Avoid all the causes you can! You can't avoid all of them, therefore you may need the aid of Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills, to nourish and tone-up the bowel-nerves; to stimulate the liver; to cleanse and purify the 32 feet of intestines where delayed activity has made poisons which cause biliousness, sick headache, irritable, grouchy feelings, and impaired efficiency in work or play.

Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills are non-secret, prompt, and pleasant. Sold by druggists for 25 years and "Better Than Castor Oil." 45 pills—30 cts.

HORSE SENSE!

TOLEDO, O.—Are horses, in a last effort to compete with the ubiquitous automobile, learning to interpret the signal lights, without aid from the drivers? So says the owner of a delivery wagon who left his horse standing outside the Nasby building. When he was inside the building, the light at Madison avenue and Huron St. (which had been set against Huron St.) changed and the stream of traffic moved. The unattended horse took one look at the light, saw the "Go" signal and started off at a canter. He made the turn on Madison avenue, taking no notice whatever of the shouts of pedestrians, who noticed the driverless vehicle. Reaching Madison avenue and Superior St., the signal was against him and he duly stopped. What might have happened after this will never be known, as the driver arrived and took charge.

SHE WENT FROM BAD TO WORSE

Down to 98 Pounds—Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cleveland, Ohio.—"After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so I tried it. After taking four bottles, I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble."—Mrs. M. RIESSINGER, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear, and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose? Wealth? Happiness?

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound may be the good fairy who offers you better health.

ST. BRIGID SENIORS URGED TO SERVICE BY SPEAKER SUNDAY

"You will not do much for yourself unless you do a great deal for your fellow man," the Rev. James Ward, St. Joseph Church, Dayton, told seven graduates of St. Brigid High School at commencement exercises held in connection with a solemn high mass at St. Brigid Church Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

The church was filled for the services which included the mass with the Rev. David Powers, pastor, as celebrant, the Rev. Father Ward as deacon and the Rev. Father Elbert, Dayton, sub-deacon, a processional of the graduates and other high school pupils and closed with benediction with the Blessed Sacrament.

Graduates and high school pupils sang the processional to organ accompaniment as they entered the church and the seniors were placed at individual kneeling benches in front of the sanctuary. Each senior was accompanied by a sponsor. The girl graduates were attired in white costumes of uniform design and their sponsors wore green frocks.

The Rev. Father Ward, beginning his address to the graduates, told them that commencement exercises at the mass was a fitting way to close the years of school work. Catholic education, he said, following the teachings of the Catholic church, teaches its children how to live and prepares them for death.

"Its education prepares the pupil mentally, morally and physically," he said. "Education without religion is not worthy of the name. While the Catholic church likes to see its children attain high places in the business wrold, is not averse to seeing them occupy prominent positions in the professions, yet the church has not so much regard for the temporal reward of her children as it has for their final destiny."

Closing he urged the graduates to "have a pure heart and clean intentions. You have been called to labor in the vineyard. Remember there is no one truly happy but those loving and serving the Master."

The seven graduates who received their diplomas were the Misses Helen Donovan, Elizabeth Killeen, Agnes Osborn and Pauline Scully and Leo Cain, James Kelble and John Geiger.

The choir sang the mass with special solo parts by Miss Eleanor McDonnell and Miss Ruth Galliger.

VALUE OF IDEALS TOLD SENIO[RS] AT WILBERFORCE EXERC[ISES]

"The Imperative Need of Imperial Ideals" was the subject discussed by Bishop W. A. Fountain, A. M., D. D., Atlanta, Ga., who delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the Wilberforce University graduating class, Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, in Jones Auditorium, Shorter Hall, where six hundred people gathered to attend the opening exercises of the sixty-fourth annual commencement of the oldest and largest colored educational institution of the country.

The general faculty, members of the graduating classes of the several departments of the school, and graduates of former commencements, met in the auditorium of Galloway Hall, and with President Gilbert H. Jones and Bishop W. H. Fountain at the head of the line, marched to Jones Auditorium.

Prof. Wm. A. Sykes, director of the musical department, was in charge of the musical program. Miss Grace Edwards, an assistant of the department, played the organ prelude, and the University Choral sang the opening hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy." Rev. R. B. Smith, presiding elder of the New Jersey Conference, offered the invocation and Dr. J. C. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn., read as the scripture lesson, Job 28:12-28. Miss Lucile Dean and Robert P. Ecton were the leading soloists. President Gilbert H. Jones introduced the speaker for the occasion, who opened his remarks by saying that Rome was the center of financial and governmental strength of the world.

"Here lived the world's greatest orators, Caesar, Cicero, and Hortenshius. Here lived the world's greatest poets, Virgil, Horace and Ovid. Here lived the world's greatest generals, Pompey, Caesar and Titus—all proudly boasted that they were Roman citizens. The man or people who found not their ideals somewhere in the confines of this imperial city was not worthy of his existence, according to the so-called best thought of the times.

"If an idea is a mental image, form, or a representation of anything," said the speaker, "then an idea is something existing in an idea or intellect, hence an ideal is the ego of a idea. Ideals are mental visions, pictures flung upon the sensitive plate of the mind as real as any ever thrown upon the canvass by a stereoptician, and out of ideals the characters of people or individuals are made.

"Men may sneer and say they are impossible, too high for every day use, but without them character is an impossible thing. The hope of my race, or any other race, is securely in Christian education and high ideals. The rising generation must be taught to admire the highest and purest in human conduct. Christian education, through imperial ideals will lead to 'golden conduct' by means of an unerring instinct. America has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectations of her most ardent admirers, because of her imperial ideals embodied in her constitution, but she has flagrantly disregarded those high ideals until her citizens cannot truthfully sing, 'That this is the land of the free, and the home of the brave.

"The business ideal of a race, should be pure and substantial. Some who leave these walls today perhaps will not be privileged to matriculate elsewhere; but in the busy, active world you must take your stand, and if you will observe the Golden Rule, 'Do unto others as you would have them to do unto you,' success awaits in the battle of life."

At the conclusion of the course the class arose and rec[ited] the following charge: "[This] age in which we live is stra[nge] and evil and full of hope. G[reat] are art, science and religion, [but] these are in their embryonic st[ate] The sweetest notes in music [are] yet to be discovered. The [last] chord is yet to be found. ALMIGHTY GOD:—I will cry unto God most high; unto God hat performeth all things for me. Psalm 57:2.

CHAMBERLIN'S FLIGHT

When Clarence Chamberlin landed safely in Ger- many with the Bellanca monoplane Columbia after a uccessful non-stop flight from Long Island over a record istance his achievement immediately took on great im- portance in its relation to the comity of nations as well as he progress of aviation. But in lauding this truly Yankee lier for his epochal achievement of not only crossing the cean but penetrating so far into Europe as a village not ar from Berlin one need not feel that the exploit in any ay belittles that for which Washington and New York re in the throes of preparation to welcome home harley Lindbergh, whose mastery of the Atlantic aerial rossing from New York to Paris always will remain dis- nctive as that of a "lone eagle" who dared and accom- lished what previously had been generally considered n impossibility or something approaching the mir- culous.

For Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine, the inexperi- nced navigator who had the hardihood to go along in hat capacity, Germany is giving a welcome which emin- ntly is their due. When Chamberlin grimly set Berlin nd not Paris as his destination he showed the stuff he made of. His arrival there proves him to be entitled to niche in fame as one of the great airmen of all times.

The achievements of Lindbergh and Chamberlin robably are the forerunners of flights which will make rossing the Atlantic or the New York to Berlin journey y air attract little more attention than do present day rossings of the Atlantic by steamships.

But it took a Lindbergh and a Chamberlin to dis- e of some of the bugaboos which have been retarding development of aviation and their success, although ubtedly aided by mechanical developments in recent s to promote the safety of piloting planes, is largely bute to their efficiency and courage as flying men.

BUSY LEGIONNAIRE

The busiest man in the United States isn't President lge. That distinction today probably is held by . Wicker, Jr., national travel director of the Amer- egion France convention committee. The job of 30,000 Legionnaires ready for the "second A. E. which is to invade Paris in September, is almost as ough a proposition as the war department had, when it as preparing to ship a couple of million doughboys ver there." Wicker has put in about three years on the egion's forth-coming pilgrimage. Hitherto the largest ace-time migration of Americans to Europe was the r association's trip in 1924. The Legion caravan will be n times the size of the lawyers' lark. General Frank T. nes, now director of the veterans' bureau, supervised e ocean movements of American troops during the orld War, and has given Wicker the benefit of the my's experience in 1917 and 1918. Wicker is a Virgin- n, a lawyer, and had overseas experience in the air rvice.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON

KELLYGRAMS

by FRED C. KELLY

WHEN MONEY IS AN OBSTACLE

A great manufacturing concern with selling branches all over the United States, has been dissatisfied all this year with the reports from two large cities in New York state.

Sales have not been large in proportion to the number of salesmen employed and considering the size of the two cities.

Last week the high - salaried president of the company became personally curious about the situation in those two places and sent a keen-minded investigator to get the facts.

The answer was at first a little hard to discover. All the salesmen were exceptionally intelligent young men, each with a personality that should have been able to charm birds out of the trees. Yet they didn't close enough sales.

Finally the investigator stumbled upon an explanation. These young men were mostly well born. That is, they came mainly from established families characterized by intelligence and success. Their parents and grandparents had been successful enough in business or professions to accumulate comfortable fortunes.

Surely, one would think, it is from successful parents that successful salesmen should spring and that probably was the theory which had led the local sales manager to select the men he did.

But belonging to financial successful families proved to be the seat of the trouble with these young salesmen. They had inherited small legacies from their ancestors. Not only that, but such inherited funds had been carefully left in charge of competent trust companies—which isn't surprising, for men capable of making and saving money would naturally want to safeguard it in their wills. The young men didn't even have a chance to lose their money and take a fresh start.

Nearly every one of the salesmen investigated in two different branch agencies had an independent income from trusteed funds amounting to from $100 to $200 a month.

It is interesting to note that no one had more than $250 a month. The average was probably less than $150. These salesmen could hardly be called wealthy. They could not live in the style to which they were accustomed without working. But nevertheless, they had less concern about holding their jobs and making good than if they had been without other sources of income.

In other words, these well bred young salesmen were handicapped by lack of incentive.

Their money was a costly luxury. It is quite conceivable that they might have more money ten years from now, and have more fun getting it, if they had inherited none.

If you were a sales manager, would you care to have your selling force made up of young men having independent incomes, always sure of a living without working?

The Theatre

By FLEET SMITH

The current season in Hollywood has been good to the Cinderellas. At least three little "extra girls" have become stars this spring. Each of them went to Hollywood with no intention of going into pictures—oh no—and in just a short time had joined the throng of "extras." The latest star discovered lived at Chester, Ill., proving that there is no geographical handicap in getting into the pictures. Her name is Nora Lane and she went to Hollywood to visit a friend.

After an appearance as an extra she was signed to star as Fred Thomson's leading lady and will no doubt be seen in "The Life of Jesse James" which Thomson is to make for Paramount. Fay Wray and Sue Carol have had parallel experiences. The former, a Hollywood high school student was discovered by Erich Von Stroheim and after playing the lead in "The Wedding March" will appear opposite Emil Jannings in "Hitting For Heaven." Sue Carol is a Chicago girl and had never seen a studio until she went to Hollywood on a visit. She has just been selected to play the lead in Douglas MacLean's "Soft Cushions."

The exquisite Esther Ralston and her husband, George Webb, are in New York for the expressed purpose of closing their "honeymoon apartment," which they rented soon after their marriage, but never lived in, owing to the star's call to Hollywood. Miss Ralston rushed to New York upon the completion of "The Modern Commandments" in which she is being starred by Paramount. On her way she stopped off at her gold mine in Arizona to pan a little gold. One should always tarry a moment at a gold mine before starting on a Fifth Ave. shopping tour.

While discussing the thrills of panning nuggets and pay dirt, Miss Ralston was asked by the writer what she thought of gold diggers in general and the possibility of her being cast as "Lorelei" in the film version of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

"There is such a vast difference between digging gold in Arizona and gold digging on Broadway that I do not feel qualified to discuss the latter occupation," she said. Miss Ralston said that although she had frequently been mentioned for the part by "her public," she did ont crave the role as she did not believe she could properly portray the typical American gold-digging blonde.

Pola Negri and her husband, Prince Serge Mdivani, recently married in France, have returned to America. The Princess announced to reporters in New York that she would continue to be Miss Negri to her friends and in fact, to everybody. She wants it known that she did not marry a title and that she is supremely in love. The Prince does not want to be known as Mr. Pola Negri, neither does he want to retain his title. He is very much American and a splendid fellow. Following his impoverishment resulting from the Russian revolution, he came to America and with his brother entered college, where they were very popular. His brother married Mae Murray. On her return to Hollywood Miss Negri will resume her work in pictures for Paramount. Her next, "Barbed Wire," is said to reveal her at her best. This picture was directed by Rowland V. Lee.

suppose someone will say: at does sneezing amount to?" reply would be: "A great " is a very important proced- it may mean in the spreading of disease and its subsequent development in hundreds of cases, and may even lead to the sacrifice of many lives.

If that is so, it is neither insignificnt nor unimportant. When the ends of certain nerve fibers in the nose and throat are irritated or stimulated the immediate response is a ze. This irritation may be uced in a variety of ways, by aught of air, by tickling with ather, a pinch of snuff, dust lmost any kind, the pollen of ain plants, and any of these, irritants of many other varie- reaching certain portions of mucous membrane of the , will at once excite a more or violent attack of sneezing.

he same thing takes place en certain portions of the eat are irritated by food or k that is too hot or too cold, any substance that is rough irritating or even by certain tions.

nezing is not confined to any or period of life, but of course mucous membrane of some ple is much more sensitive that of others. This explains some have colds or hay fever nasal catarrh all the time, le others are comparatively or rely free from it.

is perfectly evident that the dency to attacks of sneezing is rited with a great many indi- uals, for they manifest it with ost the first breath they draw r coming into the world. What pens in sneezing? Usually a e or less prolonged inhalation, ning of the mouth, elevation of tongue and pressure upon the h or palate, and then an ex- ive exhalation which may be eated any number of times, ac- ding to the intensity of the im- pression and the sensitiveness of the mucous membrane. With some, the sneezing is unattended by any discharge, but with the majority of people there is an emission of fluid or vapor from the mouth, frequently from the nose, and very often from the eyes.

Now the mouth and nose constantly contain a great variety of bacteria and it often happens that some of these bacteria are of a virulent character.

The person carrying them may be immune to them at the time or perhaps permanently.

But suppose such a person sneezes in the presence of somebody who is susceptible and liberates a swarm of these germs which are at once taken up by the one who is susceptible. This is not theory nor imagination, for it has happened repeatedly. Therefore, the point which I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can, is that whenever there is an inclination to sneeze, the mouth and nos should immediately be covered with a handkerchief or something which is equally effective and protective.

It is not polite nor decorous, and is certainly ill-mannered to spray a person with the moisture of sneezing, but worse than that is the possibility of liberating germs which may be the means of doing harm to others.

SIGNIFICANT SAYINGS OF THE DAY

"Legislation, not only in New Jersey, but in all of the other states, and in the nation itself, has reached a condition which is startling, if not alarming. It is against this volume of laws that I am making a plea that in the future we have fewer and better laws. It will be found many times that the remedy to social evils can be obtained with no new legislation whatever, and may be cured by applying some of the fundamental rules of common law, which we now possess."—William T. Read, president New Jersey State Bar association.

"Cancer is not a plague before which we must hopelessly succumb, for early treatments will cure it. What starts cancer, we do not know, but we do know that at first it is purely local, and easily removable. It is a local lesion. Take away the disease spot and the patient is cured. There are thousands of people, leading ordinary, normal lives, who have been cured."—Dr. Arthur H. Evans, cancer specialist, Westminster Hospital.

Little Old New York

NEW YORK June 13.—At a club the other night a writer was complaining that his financial worries were so great that he could not get his mind on his work, and so his financial condition was getting steadily worse.

"Nonsense," said a successful publisher. "Don't you know that all of the finest poetry and the best literature are produced by poets and novelists living on crumbs in garrets?"

"I know nothing of the kind," answered the writer. "If what you say were true, the present state of American literature should be more flourishing in undying masterpieces; for you publishers are disposed to ration us with crumbs."

At the corner of Fifth avenue and Fifty-ninth street yesterday I saw a maroon colored limousine of foreign make, the tonneau of which had no side windows and only two small, oval windows, one in the front and one in the back. The chauffeuer, of course, sat in a seat in front; but the owner of the car was entirely shut off from the stares of the vulgar.

This limousine looked somewhat like an expensive and luxurious armoured car, and it attracted a swarm of people as it waited at the curb. I stood for some time, hoping to see the owner come out of a shop and get into it. I did this because I wanted to make up my mind as to one of the two possible reasons that, it occurred to me, any one should have a car especially designed like that. One of the reasons might be that the owner is a snob who does not wish to look upon the common mob or have the common mob look at her or him. The other reason might be that the owner was physically so afflicted that he or she did not wish to be gazed upon. I never found out which was the true reason.

The importance of timeliness in reading matter and the importance of not being ahead of the public taste is strikingly exemplified in the great sale of "The New Medical Follies," by Dr. Morris Fishbein. This book is a best seller among the non fiction books.

The first chapter, which runs to nearly three-quarters of the book, is an encyclopedia of the fake cures, quackeries and psycho-therapies of the medical world. Eleven years ago H. L. Mencken published almost precisely the same list, and a much more extensive one than Dr. Fishbein's, as a supplement to "A Book of Burlesques." Mencken called it "A Genealogical Chart of the Uplift."

Mencken got $100 in advance royalties on the "'Book of Burlesques," out of which he had to pay a stenographer for typing the book $40. About a year's work netted him, then, about $60. During the intervening eleven years, however, his books have become very profitable sellers. And it is a satisfaction to note that first editions of "A Book of Burlesques" are so rare and so much in demand that they bring almost as much per copy as was Mencken's profit out of the book the first year it was issued.

The number of men (?) with make-up on their faces seems to be increasing in the neighborhood of Times Square, and is making that district more and more distasteful to normal people. These mincing creatures have their eyebrows plucked, their eyelids blacked with mascara, their cheeks and lips rouged. It is bad enough to see how much the women on Broadway are over-painted and overmade up. Some of the younger women look like circus clowns, with their faces powdered dead white, their eyebrows made artificially long with a black pencil, and their lips painted very thick. But these painted sissy boys make one want to rush for the fire-axe.

A new development in the night life of Broadway is the terror that has been struck into the hearts of some of the newspaper men who make their living by writing about the theaters, the night clubs and the life of Broadway. Two or three newspaper men who have pictured the life of the night clubs as not quite as decorous as a Sunday school picnic have been waylaid and beaten up by thugs presumably in the employ of night club operators or in the employ of gunmen who are among the big spenders at the night clubs.

There was a time when two or three small publications battened upon blackmailing anyone connected with Broadway who was thought to be drawing down a decent salary or making a fair living. Scandal was cooked up about them or inneuendoes prepared in proof form for insertion in the magazines. The editor of the publication would then send the proof around to the victim and tell him or her that unless the victim kicked in with a full page advertisement, the libellous paragraph would be printed.

The libel laws were evaded by subterfuges like that of asking a question of a scandalous nature, and not giving the answer. To frame the same insinuation as a statement would be libellous under the law, but a question would not be. Libel suits were brought, but the editor would always show himself insolvent, and the victim could not recover even in the event of winning the suit. Reputations were blasted, disgraceful insinuations were made without any apparent foundation. It is true that one such editor was caught in attempted blackmail and that he spent a term in Atlanta prison; but the graft seemed to have died out.

Now there exists the other extreme. A commentator on Broadway night life may not publish legitimate news without incurring the possibility of being beaten up by hired thugs.

How to Achieve Beauty

SUMMER HAIR PROBLEM

I have told you before that the texture of the scalp follows, to a considerable degree, the texture of the skin; that is, it is either normal, dry or oily, and summer, with its outdoor life and scorching sun brings hair problems to all but to some in greater degrees than others.

If you possess an oily scalp you will not have as great a problem as the woman with a dry scalp, as the heat of the summer drys, to a considerable degree, the natural oils and you will do well to remember that the damage of the hot weather and drying winds will be considerable unless you counteract it with minute care.

So during the summer season, with its joy and freedom of outdoor life in such great abundance, you must redouble your energies in hair attention.

Be diligent with your brushing, use good stiff brushes and plenty of vim and vigor behind them. Whether the hair is long or short, brush it long and brush it often.

Because I have spoken of the drying effects of summer sun and winds do not misunderstand me and think I do not approve of sunlight and air for the hair, because I most heartily do, and they are among the greatest tonics. I am simply warning you against the excesses that are always criminal—such as going for any length of time without a hat while sitting, standing or walking in the broiling sun. The right knid of summer air is as good for the hair as too much scorching sun is bad.

Pale blonde hair, especially, should not be exposed to the direct rays of the summer sun, or it will be inclined to take on a lifeless hue.

However, sunning and airing the hair in the right way is most beneficial. For instance, it will do your hair lots of good, no matter what type of scalp you possess, if you stand or sit in the open window on a summer morning when the sun is streaming in and let the life-giving rays of the sun pour their energy and vitality into your hair and the air sweep through it. If your hair is long you should loosen it and let it fall down over your shoulders and back so that the sun and air can penetrate and if your hair is bobbed, you should shake and ruffle your short locks. The hair will respond to this sun and air treatment as a wilting flower to a summer rain.

Police Raid Reserves' Winning Streak; Divide Two

Result Leaves Loop Leadership Still Unsettled Between Dayton Police And Xenia—Locals May Withdraw

RESERVES' WINNING streak of seven in a row was smashed by the Dayton Police Sunday afternoon at Washington Park, the minions of the law winning the first game of a double-header 8 to 4 while the Reserves earned an even break by winning the aftermath 7 to 4 in seven innings.

By dividing the twin bill, the two clubs continue in a tie for leadership of the Buckeye League with indications the deadlock will not be broken until such a time as a third meeting is scheduled later in the season.

Up until the Sunday bargain attraction, neither club had lost a game this season.

Misplays afield cost the Reserves the opening contest. Payton, who lost his first game of the year, and the veteran Lape, staged a pretty hurler's battle for seven innings but with victory in their grasp, the locals went to pieces in the field in the eighth inning, the coppers scoring five runs on three hits, five errors and a mixture of dumb and indifferent baseball.

Keifer led the Reserve batting, punching out a single and home run. The circuit smash came with one on base in the third inning. Tangeman and Scott also cracked out two hits. Gaylor led the Police with a double, single and walk.

Hits of the long distance variety won the closing game for the Reserves, together with the brilliant support accorded Cyphers in the field. The final affair was a revelation, for whereas the local nine fielded raggedly in the opener, exactly the contrary was the case in the nightcap and Cyphers was saved time and again by marvelous support.

Tangeman pounded out a home run and triple, the Reserve shortstop a triple and double and Keifer a long triple. Reserves were outhit in both games, 8 to 6 in the opener and 9 to 8 in the second contest.

The management of the local club will attend a conference of league officials Monday night and it will be decided at this time whether the Reserves will remain in the circuit or withdraw.

STRANGER WAS JOHN, HIMSELF

NIAGARA FALLS—Well, folks, John Daley is back home again, sure enough. You know, John just clean disappeared from this town a coupla months ago, and nobody ever did know what had become of him. Just vanished, hide and hair. There was a body picked up in a cinder pit over to the roundhouse that some folks said was John, but there never was anything sure about it, and it did seem like John's disappearance was one of them unsolved mysteries. Well, now, John's back, and the funny thing is that he's in jail. It seems like his folks went into the house the other evening, and here was a man asleep in the best bed, where no man had any call to be by right. So the folks just telephoned the police station, and the cops run around to the house, and here this stranger was John, himself. Well, it seems like John was sort of full of likker, and the cops had made the trip anyway, and not wanting to make a trip like that for nothing they pinched John for luck and because he was kind of lit up. Don't that beat all get out?

DOUBLE HEADERS ON PROGRAM OF LEAGUE

Double-headers were the order of the day in the Buckeye League Sunday afternoon, because several contests scheduled for earlier in the season were postponed because of rain.

Beavertown Reds took both games of a twin bill from Harshmanville on the Beaver diamond by scores of 6 to 4 nd 7 to 4. The final contest was limited to five innings, Beaver winning by counting all seven tallies in the third frame.

Bellbrook and the Osborn Miami Cements split two games at Osborn, the visitors winning the first 5 to 3 and Osborn the second 1 to 0.Both games were pitchers' battles.Osborn won the second game in the last half of the ninth round.

Xenia Reserves and Dayton Police broke even in a double-header at Xenia, leaving the league leadership still undecided.

GAVE WIFE POISON

BELLAIRE, O., June 13—Charged with giving his wife bichloride of mercury tablets as medicine for a cold several months ago, Leroy Wise, local man arrested at Ashland, Ky., was held under $3,500 bond in Squire Joseph McMahon's court. His wife was in a critical condition for weeks. She obtained a divorce while he was a fugitive.

THEN and NOW

Twenty years ago Charles Albert Bender, a chief of the Chippewas, started in winning more glory for his face on the diamond than his forefathers had won on the battlefield. He's shown as he looked when he started in winning games for the Athletics and as he looks today.

CHURCH OBSERVES ANNIVERSARY SOON

Xenia United Brethren Church will celebrate its second anniversary, June 26, with an elaborate program, commencing next Sunday, June 19, and continuing for a week.

Besides the union service, in the chapel, next Sunday evening and the address by the Rev. C. E. Englehard, pastor of the Lutheran Church, each night will be featured with special music by out-of-town talent and United Brethren pastors. Sunday, June 26, will be marked by a mass meeting at 3 p. m., preceded by music by the Otterbein Home Band. Oak St. U. B. Church Band, Dayton, will play Saturday night.

A beautiful and impressive Children's Day program was enjoyed by a large audience at the church Sunday morning. The service closed with an exercise, displaying the flag, a reading and a solo on the history of the American flag, since 150 years ago, June 14.

The quarterly conference will be held Tuesday evening, in charge of Dr. Fred L. Dennis, in the chapel, at 8 p. m. A play will be given in the dormitory Thursday evening.

BAYLIFFS DIVIDE DOUBLE HEADER IN TRIANGLE CONTEST

Bowersville Bayliffs broke even in a double-header with Wilmington on the latter's diamond Sunday afternoon in the Triangle League, losing the first 1 to 0 and copping the final 13 to 1.

Both contests were originally limited to seven innings, but the first game was forced into an extra inning.

The Bayliffs were held to one hit by D. Shadley in the first game, a safety by N. Murrell. Helky was almost as good, yielding four hits, three of which were bunched for the winning tally in the eighth round.

The second game was an easy victory. Helky bettered his previous game by allowing only two hits and one run, while Shadley failed to repeat his wonderful performance of the opening game and was soon batted out of the box.

Wilmington used five hurlers in the nightcap, all of whom were ineffective.

Bowersville will play the league-leading Spring Valley nine next Sunday, June 19 at 3 p. m. The game will be played at Wilmington. This will be the first meeting with the leaders this season.

In another Triangle League game Sunday, Spring Valley retained its position by defeating Jamestown 9 to 8 in ten innings.

AUTO CAMPAIGN IS COSTLY TO PASTOR

OTTAWA, O., June 13.— The automobile industry chalked up another victory here today when the Rev. Frank M. Karns resigned pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church departed for Toledo to engage in private pursuits.

The Rev. Karns disagreed with his congregation, and is reported to have opposed automobile riding especially when it was not necessary for church purposes. His parishioners said he termed it an instrument of the devil in the hands of ordinary persons.

The church will dispense with the services of a pastor until after the West Ohio Methodist Conference next fall.

CRACKERS ARE GREAT; MAKE BOW LEGS STRAIGHT

CHICAGO.—H. E. Van Norman is a man exceeding smart and wise; he knows his p's, he knows his q's, he also knows his i's. As long as fashion's foibles dictate skirts so very brief, the girls whose legs are not so straight are filled with woe and grief; for a girl's legs may be crooked, and if fashions are concealing it matters not at all, but now, when dresses are revealing each maiden's limbs to all the world, Dame Fashion's hardest blows are showered on the flapper who must show her beau her bows. Now comes H. E. Van Norman with advice that's smart and sage: "Eat more good food," he tells the girls, "and then you'll be the rage. More calories and vitamines will make your bowlegs straight; lunch every day on crackers, and you'll be feeling great." Thus comes true science once again to dry up human tears, and for H. E. Van Norman all the bow-legged girls shout "Cheers!"

THESE ARE THE ANSWERS TO THE QUESTIONS ON PAGE FOUR

1. President Poincare of France has announced that he hoped to get better debt settlement terms from the United States.

2. Clarence Chamberlin and Charles Levine have formulated a plan to invest $2,000,000 in establishing a transatlantic commercial airplane line.

3. Richmond, Va., reports an earthquake shock which rocked houses, but caused no serious damage, at 2:17 a. m. June 10.

4. On June 10 Commander Francesco de Pinedo, Italian intercontinental flyer, started from the Azores on his flight back to Italy.

5. Ray and Roy de Autremont, twin brothers, were arrested in Steubenville, O., for a train robbery in Oregon after a four-year search.

a school for the deaf at Northampton, Mass. The wife of the president and the mother of the hero found a wealth of mutual interest during their historic hours together in Washington.

It happens that one of the most novel of a myriad of suggestions for enduringly honoring Lindbergh comes from Mrs. Coolidge's own town. The Vermont State Chamber of Commerce, at Burlington, proposes that some American composer worthy of the task proceed to write a Lindbergh "flight symphony." The chamber says: "Well has it been observed that words fail to express what needs to be expressed in connection with Lindbergh's achievement. Nothing could be more musical than that indescribable flight, the perfect personality of the flier, and the great recognition of a great event by the people of France. What movements there could be in such a symphony after the perilous taking-off flight over land and sea, by a lone aviator, with a whole world thinking about him—flight by day and by night, and finally a burst of light and an ovation by a whole people."

Political Washington paused in the midst of its Lindbergh complex to gasp over the little "run-in" between President Coolidge and Senator Smoot on the question of a special session of congress. The G. O. P. high priest from Utah emerged from the executive sanctum and authorized the statement that the president would convene congress in October. No sooner had that word been winged to the country than Mr. Coolidge issued a devastating denial. It was accompanied by the stern assertion that when there was anything to announce about a special session, the president would be his own broadcaster. Nobody imagines that the White House meant to rebuke the all-powerful chairman of the senate finance committee. But it isn't the first time that Mr. Coolidge has taken occasion publicly to resent the periodic practice of callers to tell the world what they gleaned at his desk before he was ready to have it known.

North Carolina Republicans, who are probably the most numerous of their breed anywhere in Dixie are to the front with the very newest thing under the 1928 sun. One of their spokesmen, rhapsodizing over the action of Governor Fuller, of Massachusetts, in appointing a committee to investigate the Sacco-Vanzetti case, deposes and says that it's big enough to earn Fuller national recognition. He therefore proposes that Republican history could well afford to repeat itself next year, whereby the presidential ticket would be headed by an Ohioan and tail-ended by a son of the Bay State—as it was in 1920. To that end he suggests Nicholas Longworth for president, and Alvan T. Fuller for vice president.

Ever since it became known that Senator Borah, Demosthenes of congress, has been reduced to a whisper by an operation for tonsilitis, Washington wags have hastened to say that everything Vice President Dawes wants to accomplish could be accomplished by removing tonsils on both sides of the senate aisle. Newspapers all over the country are now printing an advertisement bearing the photograph and autograph of Senator Curtis, of Kansas, administration leader in the senate. The advertisement recommends a certain brand of cigarets, and Curtis suggestively observes that nearly all senators smoke cigarets and find, to their joy, that the habit does not affect their voices.

Senor Honorio Pueyrredon, the ambassador of Argentina at Washington, is in the midst of an extensive tour of study in the agricultural areas of the middle west. He decided to spend his vacation that way instead of indulging, as most of his ambassadorial confreres at this season do, in the luxury of holidays on some fashionable seashore. Senor Pueyrredon will travel from coast to coast by automobile. His family is in the party and the caravan consists of two cars. The ambassador will inspect wheat farms, cattle ranches, sugar-beet plantations, fruit orchards and department of agriculture experimental stations. He's particularly interested in Uncle Sam's fight on the corn-borer and on hog cholera. Among several members of congress who paved the way for the Argentinian diplomat's expedition is Senator Kendrick, of Wyoming, who is one of the country's great stock growers.

Ambassador Houghton is tarrying in Washington on leave from the Court of St. James' at London. Our envoy to Great Britain is found by capital correspondents conspicuously less communicative than he was in the spring of 1926, when Mr. Houghton's observations on the European situation created a near-crisis "over there" and a storm in the United States senate. Private affairs largely, the ambassador asserts, brings him home at this time. The forty-first reunion of his Harvard class is one of the Houghton missions on native heath. The ambassador is loud in praise of Lindbergh's bearing in England. "He's a boy of whom we can all be very proud," Mr. Houghton avers, "for he has received honors unprecedented and kept his head."

"The Making of a Law," is the title of an informative address to be delivered next week by Mrs. Martha R. Gold, secretary to United States Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, in Kansas City. Her forum will be the national convention of the Kappa Beta Pi legal sorority. Mrs. Gold, in her non-secretarial incarnation, is a lawyer. Seventeen senators now have woman secretaries. Two of them voted in the senate against woman suffrage—Borah and Moses. The baby senator "Young Bob" LaFollette, is one of the solons who are secretaried by young women. The bobbed-haired group, which now has a gallery to itself in the senate, contains some of the shrewdest politicians on Capitol hill.

The Rovin' Ritzies
By Flo Frederick

The Ritzies say, "Come over,"
But not without a clover.

Bill Roscoe was soon to be taken into the Ritzie club. Even if he wanted to he couldn't have forgotten about it for one minute. His classmates were constantly eyeing him from behind their books or writing notes to each other and then looking at him significantly.

It was the second day since Bill had kept his appointment at the Ritzie carpenter shop and received instructions to speak to none of his friends under any circumstances. He had stuck to his promise to keep silence and his classmates had learned better than to tease him about it after their encounter with Marty and the twins on the day before. They were now busy watching for what would happen next, and scarcely for a minute did they let Bill out of their sight.

Even Bill was beginning to get a little worried for fear that something had gone wrong. The Ritzies had promised to send him instructions but no one had appeared with a message of any kind. His thoughts were interrupted by the ringing of the bell and his class was soon passing out into the cloakroom. He had just taken his cap off the hook when he felt a tug at his sleeve and whirled about to find a girl from one of the lower grades looking up at him.

"Are you Bill Roscoe?" she asked.

"Yes," answered Bill, anxious to get rid of her before his classmates saw her and started teasing.

The little girl only smiled an answer, slipped a note into his hand and disappeared around the corner of the stairs. Bill slipped the note into his shirt and took a swift look around to see if he was being watched. It was bad enough being teased about keeping silence, but to be seen receiving a note from a girl would be the last straw. His classmates had been engaged in a heated argument and the incident had escaped unnoticed. It was with a sigh of relief that Bill unfolded the scribled note and read:

"Initiation ceremony at 4:30 at the Ritzie clubroom. Knock three times, pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole door and you will be admitted at once. Remember, you are still in silence."

"Pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole," repeated the stupified Bill. Why, he had never found a four-leaf clover in his whole life! If he could only ask one of his best friends to help him find one; but he was still on silence. There was nothing for it but to do his best, and he started out on the run for a patch of clover that he had often noticed on his way to school.

Squatting down in the midst of the big clover bed, he turned the little green flowers over one by one, hoping to find an extra leaf. Once he found a five-leafed clover and considered tearing off one of the leaves, but was afraid the Ritzies would detect it so he cast it aside and hunted harder than ever for a four-leafed one. There were only fifteen minutes left and he couldn't appear at the carpenter shop without it!

He was so busy with his task that he hadn't noticed the circle of boys that had gathered around the clover patch. They were gazing at him in wonderment. Had he gone mad? Why would any one be pawing over a patch of grass like that unless something had gone wrong with his thinking machine! The boys were about to take pity on him and hurry him home to a doctor, when, with a sudden shout of glee, Bill jumped to his feet, dashed through the circle of boys, scarcely noticing them, and tore down the street, holding something aloft in his hand. The boys were more stupefied than ever at this and gave it up as a hopeless mystery. The Ritzies had always been too much for them to understand, and now old Tubby Bill was getting the same way.

Bill didn't stop to catch his breath until he reached the carpenter shop door. He wrapped three times and the porthole flung open. Proudly he handed in his four-leaf clover and waited breathlessly to see what would happen.

Read in tomorrow's story what happens to Bill after the Ritzies get him inside the carpenter shop.

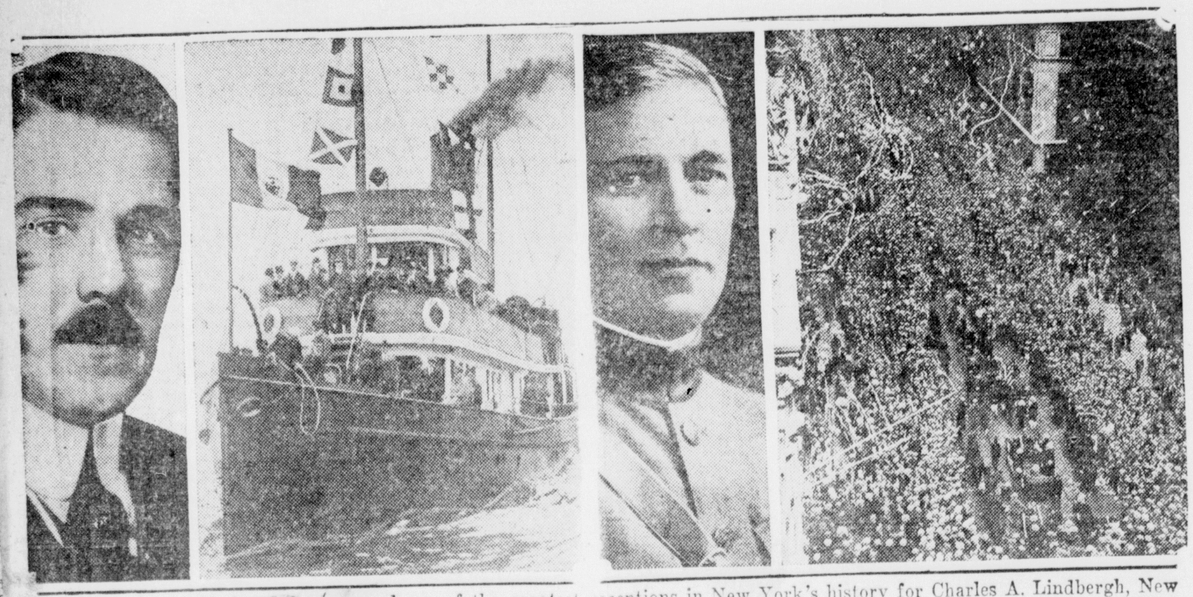
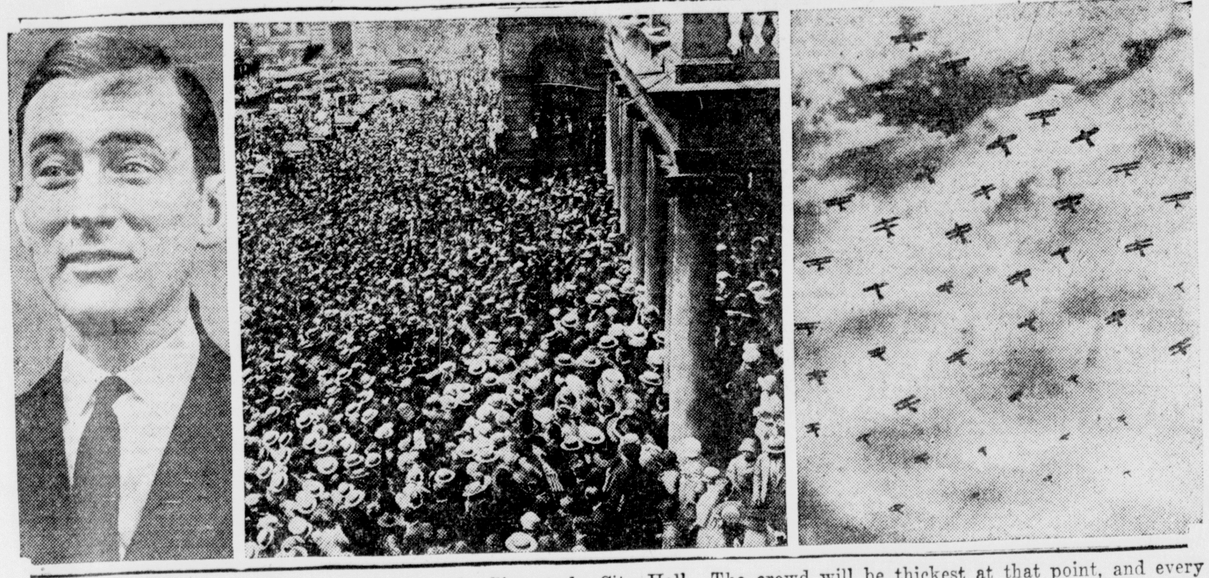
New York Holds Reception For Colonel Lindbergh



Grover A. Whalen, left, prepared one of the greatest receptions in New York's history for Charles A. Lindbergh, New York to Paris flyer. The tug Macom will bring him to the Battery. From that point, with Major General William N. Haskell, grand marshal, Lindbergh will move in triumphal procession to the City Hall, amid showers of confetti and ticker tape and the applause of the crowd.



Mayor James J. Walker will receive the flier at the City Hall. The crowd will be thickest at that point, and every square foot of ground and every bit of window space will be utilized for a view of the flier. In connection with the reception, New York will stage one of the greatest aerial parades in histo ry. Two hundred planes, of every size and description, will fly over the length of the city, making a sight unsurpassed in the p ast.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED:

The entrance of America into the World war finds Phillip Wynne Tracy IV suffering from the collapse of his first passionate love affair. Natlee, to whom he had had a childish engagement with Butler ones. And Rod Smith, first to enlist, is off to training camp.

Finally the regiment is ordered back to New York, presumably bound for France. While in New York Phil meets Natlee and their love flaming anew, they plan to be married. The immediate departure of the troops, however, prevents this. Phil's regiment is sent to the front soon after arriving in France and Phil is detailed on an extremely dangerous mission. Returning with important information he is wounded and Rod is killed trying to save his friend. Phil wakes in a hospital and receives the croix de guerre for bravery. Letters from his mother and Natlee only depress him.

At length he rejoins his outfit in the Argonne woods, but he looks so ill that he is sent to a motor school in the south of France. Three days after his arrival, armistice is declared.

Here the story further unfolds—

John Aukland bent over Anne and lightly kissed her hair.

ANNE PLANS TO SEEK PHILLIP

THE order came on Christmas Day for Phil to go up into Germany, but it was not to his old outfit. It was good, nevertheless, to be among the Americans again, for he was a part of the victorious army that was stationed at Coblenz and far about. He wrote to his mother and Natlee, but he had been moved about so much he was not sure they had gotten his letters—at least he had not heard from them since he had enlisted.

Many a German girl attracted by Phil's uniform and hair, sometimes in words and sometimes by actions, that he was ready to practice Christian charity and forgive her enemy.

Phillip Wynne Tracy IV, however, told himself that his flirting days were over. Not one of these flaxen-haired girls ever gave him the intimation of the slightest thrill.

Once in a while one of them whose hair was yellower than the others would make him think of the lovely satin-silk bands about Natlee's head, and he would long once again to let his fingers thread its soft mass.

He picked up some lovely Russian lapis lazuli beads and a pair of earrings because he thought they would match Natlee's eyes.

But for them he gave the last dollar he had, for he had not had any money from home since he left America. If his mother had sent it, it had miscarried.

Again he was ashamed to hang around when the mail was distributed. He grew to feel that there was something almost sinister about his name, which made it one no one wished to repeat.

At last one day, on the bulletin board, he read that a number of outstanding American soldiers who had had two years of college and who could produce 250 francs could have three months' work at one of the different universities in England and France.

How he wished he had made up the conditions and entered the university at Christmas, as his mother had wanted him to do. How he wished he had really saved the money he had paid for the lapis lazuli beads he had purchased for Natlee.

However, Phillip had never been discouraged by any obstacles if he wished to do anything very much. He made his application, saying that he had the requisite requirements and education.

"It is perfectly preposterous to think for a moment that among the other boys in my regiment I will be singled out from those who deserve more," he said to himself cynically, "but it will be amusing to see how many lies I can make up for myself."

ANNE HUNTINGTON TRACY all her life dreaded when the anniversary of Armistice Day came around, for on the day that the war was declared over she was in the Walter Reid hospital at Washington, fully conscious that the whole world was determined to make as much noise as possible.

"Tell them to be still!" she would shriek with her hands over her ears. "Tell them to be still. I cannot bear it."

Her nurse tried to tell her that all Washington was holding jubilee because the guns had stopped firing and the killing of human beings had ceased—but Anne Tracy did not understand.

"The noise is killing me. Please make them to stop," she kept begging. For three days she had been delirious with flu, and the glorious news which came from seeing thousands upon thousands of men and women going mad with joy, she did not know.

Even after the flu had run its course, her brain, overtaxed with the agony of suspense, refused to function normally.

Every noise that could not be kept from her room seemed to be torture to her. She repeated constantly, "Tell them to stop the machine guns"—or "the shell"—as the noise might be heavy or slight.

She had intervals when she would ask quite sanely, "Have you heard from Phil since he went back to the Argonne?" Then before they could answer her mind would wander, and she might speak as though the war was something she knew nothing about.

It was the last of January before Major Aukland or any one else was able to see her.

Then he had to take to her the distressing news that nothing had been heard from her son since the armistice.

"I do not think anything has happened to Phil, Anne," he said, "but I have been trying very hard to get some news from him ever since you have been ill."

The pale and wasted woman on the bed turned such anguished eyes upon him that he fairly picked her up in his arms saying, "Dear, dearest Anne, as soon as you are able, I will take you to Germany, for that is probably where he is. Anne, it breaks my heart to see you grieve. Will you not let me comfort you a little? Anne, dear, you know there has never been another woman in my life but you. I loved you before you married the father of your boy. Anne, be my wife, and we will go together to hunt him.

"You have years before you in which to be happy. Let me help to make them so," he pleaded.

"John, you are more than good to me," she said gently. "I am afraid I have spoiled your life. But for me, you might now have had wife and children."

"Dear Anne, do you not know that you are worth waiting for? Say that you will make me wait no longer. Let us be married immediately."

"I know why you are urging haste, John. In your unselfish love, you want to take care of me. I confess that being taken care of looks very good to me, but I cannot marry anyone until my boy is found.

"Think, dear, I may find him maimed in such a way that he will need my whole care. If that should be so, I could not ask you to share it with me, for I must not keep from you the fact that although I am very fond of you, yet Phillip will always come first."

"But, dearest Anne, what if you find your son perfectly well? Do you not know that some time, sooner or later he will leave you for some young girl? Anne, you have been alone all your life, and yet you are the one woman I have ever met who enjoys—yes, needs — companionship most.

"Darling, don't send me away from you again. I know I can make you happy."

MAJOR Aukland had been holding her in his arms as he would a child. Her head was on his breast. Now he laid her back gently and pulled the covers up under her chin.

Anne found his care and sympathy very comfortable. With a sigh almost of content she cuddled down into her pillows.

Major Aukland sat down beside her bed and took the one hand which was lying inertly outside the coverlet in his.

"Then, dear, I can begin to make arrangements to leave on the Mauretania the last of next week. With me to take care of you on the trip across. I know you will be well enough to go. I'll see the doctor now."

He started toward the door.

"Wait, John," Anne's voice, though weak, was decisive. The man came back to the bed and stood looking down upon her.

"I hope I will be well enough to start across the last of next week, but John, dear John, please do not press me for my answer until I have seen Phillip."

"You do not care for me, Anne?"

"Yes, dear, I do, but neither you nor I would be happy if Phil did not approve."

"He has no right to object," broke in the major, hotly. "For 20 years you have given up your life for him. Now you owe something to yourself."

"I am not quite sure, John, just what you mean by 'you owe something to yourself.' Do you mean that I must try and be happy? You should know that I could not be even content if I were estranged in any way from Phil. No, I do not mean that exactly, for I may not approve of his opinions or his actions in the future any more than I have done in the past, but I probably will not let him know it.

"In the short time I was married to his father I made the mistake of letting him see that I disapproved. I have come to the conclusion that even now, after the war, we women must still get from the men we love the things we want by our personality—which I am hearing a great many people call our 'sex appeal'—or by our diplomacy—never by the reason and righteousness of our desires.

"John, this little visit we have had this morning has been rather tragic, for it has shown me, and it must have shown you also, that we are old.

"When one reasons over the right or wrong of love, one is too old to love singly—or if young, it shows one is not interested.

"If we had been young, you would have picked me up and carried me away by the sheer force of your passion instead of talking it over with me as you have done. Get me the tickets for the trip, dear John, but let it be on some boat which sails a day or two after the Mauretania. We will meet in Paris."

"And I shall lose out, dear Anne, with the son, as I did years ago when we were young—with the father. However, I'll do as you wish, dear, and if I cannot have you for my wife, I will never put any other woman in the place I have always wanted you to fill."

John Aukland bent over Anne and lightly kissed her hair and left the room. As Anne turned away that the nurse might not see her face, she thought, "Oh, John, I wish you had kissed my lips and taken me in spite of any objections I might have made."

BALLABOOSA, Ga.—Mrs. Mary H. Lloyd, who is 80 years old, understands now what is wrong with the younger generation. For four score years she got along without going to the movies. The other evening she attended her first motion picture performance, and the wickedness of the world was at once made plain. "No wonder girls are wild," said Mrs. Lloyd after the show. NEW YORK HAS NEW HONORS FOR ACE

Trans-Atlantic Ship Out Of Order—Strong Wind Bolws

WASHINGTON, June 13.—With a wave of his hand and a cheery grin, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh sent a speedy army pursuit plane into the air at Bolling Field at 8:54 o'clock this morning—bound for New York and another tremendous homecoming celebration.

A last minute bit of hard luck forced the youthful flyer to abandon his trans-Atlantic plane "The Spirit of St. Louis" on the field, and take an army plane for the two-hour journey.

The "St. Louis" didn't tune up right when mechanics started the motor. The trouble was a faulty cylinder, a "sweaty cylinder" they call it in the air service, and upon the advice of brother flyers at the field, Lindbergh reluctantly decided to accept a substitute plane it was a keen disappointment to him, for he had his heart set upon returning to New York in the same famous "bus" he left there in three weeks ago on the flight to Paris.

"With five million people waiting for you up there, you'd better not take chances on a forced landing or not getting there," they told him.

"Yes. Guess you're right," said Lindy," and reluctantly agreed to the shift.

The substitute was trundled out, a shiny little Curtis C-1 type, painted black and yellow. The fuselage bore a picture of the dome of the Capitol and the numerals "34" on each side. The under-surface of the wings bore "U. S. Army."

Lindbergh climbed in, and began to spin the motor. A small group of army flyers clung on to the sides of the cockpit, giving him suggestions as to the controls and the "goods" of the little racer. Lindbergh nodded quickly.

He shoved off in the teeth of a strong northeast wind, which had the flags about the field whipping stiffly in the early morning sunlight. The strength of the breeze may slow up his flying time to New York, although he was confident he would make it in two hours anyway. The distance is approximately 230 miles.

The field was muddy from last night's heavy rains, but it was accomplished without mishap either to "Lindy" or the escorting planes. The trim little Curtis taxied out, headed into the wind, and began to travel. Like a pert bird she started skimming head-on into the wind, gathering speed as the motor raced. The tail went up as she straightened to her work, and then he pulled the stick backward and soared aloft in a terrific burst of speed.

Two score planes accompanied him into the air, the staccato roaring of their motors drowning out the cheers of several thousand watchers, who despite elaborate military and police precautions had gathered at the field to see the getaway.

The first group of single-seaters preceded "Lindy" into the air, and the first observation group, composed of two-seaters, followed him.

Lindbergh bade goodbye to Washington with a flourish, and gave experienced flyers at the field a final thrill by his daring take-off. As his landing wheels left the ground at the end of the run, he "pulled the stick into his stomach," as they say slangily in the air service and zoomed straight up into the sky. But the little Curtis motor was sturdy and he never faltered. He banked over, raced nto greater altitude, did a loop, and circled the field twice while the two-seaters were getting off the ground in groups of three.

"Wow," said a pair of army pilots who witnessed his breath-taking get away.

He circled the field until his escorting planes were all up and going. Then he turned the nose of the little racer northeast by the compass, and roared away. In five minutes he was but a speck in the sun-shot haze of the early morning, and in ten minutes he was out of sight.

Commander Richard E. Byrd, the North Pole flyer, took off from the field in an amphibian naval plane soon after "Lindy" soared away.

After the departure, it developed that several days work probably will be required before the "Spirit of St. Louis" is again ready to fly. The engineering officer of the field reported that a cam follower (CO) was cracked, swollen and stuck. While it will not be necessary to tear down the engine to make the repairs, one cylinder will have to be removed entirely, it was said.

WILL USE PLANE

CLEVELAND, O., June 13.—The Thompson Products Company Inc., has purchased an airplane to be used for "hurry-up" trips of officials of the concern and for "special deliveries." Other planes will be purchased later, according to E. G. Thompson, vice president.

YOUTH CRUSHED AS TRACTION CAR HITS AUTO AT CROSSING

Boy Loses Toe On Left Foot—Jump Fails To Save Him

Herbert Bowermaster, 14, Locust St., was injured so severely when a northbound Springfield and Xenia traction car his an auto near the municipal waterworks plant, north of Old Town on the Springfield Pike, about 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, that it was necessary for surgeons at McClellan Hospital to amputate the big toe on the left foot.

The youth, who is a cripple, attempted to leap from the car to safety but jumped in front of the approaching traction and was wedged between the auto and the front end of the traction car.

John Roberts, 35, also of Locust St., the driver, leaped to safety from the other side of the car, when it stalled on the crossing.

Bowermaster suffered injuries about the head consisting of cuts and bruises and both feet were bruised and lacerated. He was taken to McClellan Hospital by Frank Wagner , colored , Dunbar Ave., Dayton, where his injuries were treated by Dr. B. R. McClellan.

Bowermaster, with his father, Roy, two brothers and Roberts was fishing along the Little Miami River, and Roberts and young Bowermaster returned to Xenia to obtain a bucket in which to gather wild strawberries.

In returning to the river, the motor stalled as the machine was being driven across the car tracks in front of the northbound traction.

Peter Shagin, motorcycle policeman, investigated the accident.

WILE SAYS:

Hello Lindy Capital Pauses Suggests Fuller Tonsil Politics?

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1927

WASHINGTON, June 13. — There was more than the usual "mother touch" in the meeting at the White House between Evangeline Lindbergh and Grace Coolidge. Both women vaulted into the world's eye in the midst of lives that had strangely similar and humble origins. Perhaps the circumstance which the first lady of the land and Mrs. Lindbergh find most common to them is that by profession each is a school teacher. Today one is mistress of the White House; the other, the most envied mother on earth.

Comparatively little is known of the teaching career of either of them. Since fame overtook her, less than three weeks ago, it has leaked out that Mrs. Lindbergh, who teaches chemistry in a Detroit high school, is extraordinarily proficient in that science. Women in the Washington congressional set, who knew Mrs. Lindbergh when her husband was in the house, have been heard in recent hours calling her an American Madame Curie. Mrs. Coolidge, preceding her marriage in 1905, taught lip-reading in

SHOOTING CLAIMS ONE; ANOTHER HURT

NEWARK, O., June 13.—Fred Paul, 40, is dead, and his wife, Anna, is reported dying at a local hospital with a bullet through her brain, as the result of a shooting at the home of Mrs. Paul's father here Sunday afternoon. The husband, who had been estranged and separated from the woman for three weeks, called at her father's home and urged a reconciliation. When his wife refused to return to him, he suddenly produced a pistol and shot her, then shot himself, dying instantly. The couple are the parents of six children, ranging in age from 3 to 16 years.

LINDBERGH GETS MEMBERSHIP IN AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY

Flyer Declares Hawaii Flight Should Not Be Attempted Without Proper Navigation—Talks "Shop" Among Brother Flyers

WASHINGTON, June 13.— Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was entered today into the ranks of the immortals of aviation and science. It was the final honor conferred upon him before he left for New York to receive the acclaim of the great metropolis for his epochal flight to Paris.

The greatest figures in modern-day aviation attended a breakfast in the flyer's honor early this morning, and saw conferred upon him a life membership in the National Aeronautical Association, which has been conferred upon but nine other men in history; and the Hubbard medal by the National Geographic Society, which is reserved for the trail-blazers in history and science.

President Porter H. Adams of the National Aeronautic Association told "Lindy" that he well deserved to take his place beside the nine other holders of life membership in the organization. They are Wilbur, Orville and Miss Katherine Wright, Samuel Pierpont Langley, Octave Chanute, John J. Montgomery, Charles M. Manley, Glenn Hammond Curtiss and Thomas A. Edison.

The youth who seemed ill at ease in the pomp of an official celebration, was at home at the breakfast, where he could talk aviation with those who understood. He beamed his appreciation when Commander Richard Byrd, whom he beat in the race to Paris, personally presented the Hubbard medal.

Among the leaders in aviation present were chiefs of the army and navy air crops, Donald Hall, designer of "The Spirit of St. Louis,"; Capt. A. C. Read and Capt. H. C. Richardson, trans-oceanic fliers; Lieut. L. C. Maitland, world speed record holder; Glenn Martin, pioneer aircraft builder; Robert Nungesser, brother of the misisng French ace; Lieut. Russell Maughan, "dawn-to-dusk" flier; George K. Burgress, lighter-than air-craft designer and Dwight Morrow of J. P. Morgan and Company, whose committee recomended the "five-year air program."

In a characteristically brief speech after receiving the Hubbard medal from the hands of Lt. Com. Richard E. Byrd, Lindbergh spoke of the practicability of a California-to-Hawaii flight. Such a trip is feasible, he said, but he warned against attempting it by dead-reckoning the course, as he did on his New York-to-Paris trip.

"Aviation is on a sound business basis today," the young flyer told the distinguished audience of aviation specialists," and it must continue to be developed along these lines. Trans-Atlantic flying will come, but it will require sound gorund organization and extended research and direction by experienced men.

"There is a great interest at this time in a flight from California to Hawaii. This flight is entirely practicable, it can be done and it will be done. However, I hope no one tries to make it on the principle of navigation I used in my New York-to-Paris flight.

"If I had struck the coast of Ireland 300 miles north or south of where I did I still could have made Paris, but had I deviated any more I could not have made it because I would have been short of fuel. If an attempt is made to reach Hawaii by dead reckoning and the plane is a few degrees off the course and misses the coast there are several thousand miles of Pacific Ocean beyond, with small chance of a pilot's being picked up.

"I believe the flight should be made by radio navigation, or the pilot should carry a navigator."

His brother flyers at the breakfast gave their youthful compatriot, a hearty greeting. In presenting the Hubbard medal to Lindbergh, Lt. Com. Byrd referred indirectly to his own plans for a flight to Paris, which are now understood to be in abeyance.

"We were hoping to ge to Paris ourselves," 'said the naval flyer, "but Col. Lindbergh got there first, and we are all glad he did."

PLANE SIGHTED

RIO JANEIRO, June 13.—Fishermen arriving here today reported sighting what they believed to be an areoplane off the Macara Island. The plane may have been that of Major Sarmento Beires, Portuguese trans-Atlantic flyer who has been missing a week. Tugs have been dispatched to Marca Island to investigate.

HONOR ACCORDED TO TRANS-OCEAN ACES WHEREVER THEY GO

Chamberlin And Levine Get Taste Of What Lindy Enjoyed

BADEN BADEN, Germany, June 13.—Although incognito, Clarence Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine are unable to escape adulation.

The two American flyers who ended their trans-ocean jump in Germany a week ago today, are here today for a rest with but little prospect of getting it.

Throughout their journey from Berlin their train was greeted by hundreds gathered at the stations and the conductor was forced to give them an extra compartment to hold the floral tributes hurled on the train.

At Karlsruhe the Association of Ex-Army Pilots presented Chamberlin and Levine with the insignia of their association and made them honorary members, thus, Chamberlin is the only former allied pilot to have the insignia of the German war pilots.

On arrival at Baden Baden the two flyers were taken by storm, 3,000 ardent admirers cheering them and the mayor and members of the city council extending an official welcome to them. The crowds carried the two fliers to their automobile upon their shoulders.

The Hotel Stefaine, where the two fliers registered, has suddenly become almost an American hostelry for in the past twenty-four hours more than 150 Americans have registered there.

Chamberlin today took account of cash on hand. He started for Europe with $11.60 and he has given away $1.60 as souvenir coins, but he still has $10, having found it impossible to spend a penny in Germany.

Chamberlin and Levine have decided to return to Berlin by commercial plane on Wednesday and will then fly to Bremen on Thursday to meet their wives.

Chamberlin received his first kiss from a German fraulein here. At the reception following his arrival an attractive girl, dressed in the quaint costume of the local peasant, forced her way to the side of the flyer, implanted a resounding smack and vanished. Chamberlin gestured helplessly in great embarrassment.

NINETEEN HURT AS BUS STRIKES CARS

PHILADELPHIA, June 13.—Nineteen persons were injured today when a Philadelphia-bound bus collided with a number of machines in trying to avoid a collision with a taxicab on the Delaware River bridge. The bus skidded and slid into a long line of about seventy-five cars, shaking up scores of persons. Six machines were damaged badly, one car bursting into flames.

John Bryan, bus driver, of this city, was arrested on a reckless driving charge.

WATROUS WINS FAME

OAKMOUNTAIN, Pa., June 13—Al Watrous, veteran of many golf tournaments, held the Indian sign today on the other 149 contenders for the national open crown. Al made a hole in one.

Watrous was playing with Walter Hagen against Johnny Farrell and Jimmy Johnston, when he sunk the pellet with his tee shot. It happened on the thirteenth hole which is surrounded by bunkers and traps.

Watrous took a mighty cut at the ball it came to earth six inches from the cup and rolled in. The thirteenth is a 164-yard hole.

Guns Boom, Whistles Shriek And 16,000 Police Fail To Keep Order As Flyer Returns To Metropolis As Air Hero

NEW YORK, June 13.—Aflame with color and bursting with enthusiasm, New York today roared a tumultuous welcome to Charles A. Lindbergh, who three weeks and three days ago blazed a glorious trail through the air from New York to Paris.

"Lindy!"

That was the affectionate greeting roared from millions of throats. Again and again, in thunderous volume, the huge throngs stretching from the Battery to Central Park, shouted that one word in a hysterical frenzy.

Guns boomed, harbor vessels shrieked, factory whistles blew, automobile horns honked and people went wild with admiration as Colonel Lindbergh made his triumphal entry into the city.

Nothing comparable to it has been witnessed in New York since the return of the famous Twenty-seventh division from the World War.

Even Admiral George Dewey's reception upon his return from Manila Bay in 1899 was surpassed and certainly the welcome was as great as that accorded General John J. Pershing when he returned victoriously from the World War.

Bedlam broke loose when "Lindy" in an army amphibian plane, descended gracefully in the gleaming waters of the harbor.

The big guns from Governors Island and Fort Wadsworth boomed their greeting; whistles and sirens on the hundreds of craft of all sorts, from majestic ocean liners to tiny tugs, that choked the harbor, were unloosed and from the green slopes of the shore, thousands of people let forth a mighty roar—"Lindy."

"Lindy" smiled shyly. He had expected a reception, but nothing quite like this. He waved to crowds lining the decks of the flag bedecked vessels. He was soon transferred from the cockpit of the city's official boat, the Macom, which was brightly dressed in flags from stem to stern.

Bands aboard the boats played stirring tunes as the Macom with the famous guest on deck, steamed up the harbor through a lane of several hundred vessels to pier A, at the battery.

Airplanes droned overhead in the bright sunlight, sweet music to "Lindy's" ears. He looked upward frequently, as the flyers executed fancy formations.

Fifty thousand people were massed around Battery Park when the Macom landed "Lindy" at the Battery. A hundred brightly groomed police horses, bearing mounted officers, pranced excitedly while their riders strove to control the straining crowds.

More than 1,000 policemen formed a solid cordon in the two blocks between pier A and the elevated station. From there to City Hall Park, where New York was to officially claim Colonel Lindbergh as her own, thousands of other policemen were stationed at intervals of ten feet. Half of the entire police force of 16,000 men were on duty somewhere along the line of march.

Preceded by an escort of 10,000 troops, "Lindy" was taken up through lower Broadway, between dense throngs of people, to City Hall, where his mother, Mrs. Evangeline Lodge Lindbergh, was awaiting to view the official reception of her son by the city.

At City Hall Park a huge throng assembled to witness the official welcoming in "Lindy's" honor. They occupied every available seat in three hastily constructed wooden grandstands and thousands more stood for blocks around.

It was a colorful assemblage. Women and girls, attired in bright colored gowns and waving flags, made up a large portion of this audience, but the men had their representation, too. Those in the grandstands had been admitted by special ticket. Mounted police experienced difficulty in keeping the crowd back of the ropes.

From the windows of nearby sky scrapers ticker tape and torn bits of paper descended upon the heads of spectators.

As "Lindy" came up from the Battery, officials on the reviewing stand entertained the spectators by introducing dignitaries.

When the band played various inspiring tunes, the various consul generals in the city were presented. So were all the following:

Major General James H. McRae and staff, Rear Admiral Charles P. Plunkett and staff, city commissioners, members of the board of aldermen, the board of estimates, and finally, the mayor and his military and executive aides.

At 12:40 p. m. the start of the parade of 10,000 troops that were escorting "Lindy" up from the Battery swerved in off Broadway, led by a band. This was the signal for a wild outburst of enthusiasm from the crowd.

NEW YORK, June 13.—Resplendent in flags and bunting and its millions of people seething with excitement, New York today eagerly awaited the arrival from Washington of Charles A. Lindbergh, air mail pilot and colonel in the United States Air Service Reserve, prepared to give beloved "Lindy" the most tumultuous reception ever accorded an individual.

Even the return of Admiral George Dewey from Manila Bay in September, 1899, and General John J. Pershing's triumphal entry into the city at the conclusion of the World War will be equalled, if not surpassed, in the degree of popular acclaim and adoration.

No event since the return of the famous Twenty-seventh division in 1919 has so stirred the emotions of the populace.

"Lindy" was to arrive at some landing field in the vicinity of New York in his army plane, transfer to an army Amphibian plane and descend in the waters of the lower bay where, amid a deafening din of harbor craft, he will be taken aboard the city's welcome boat, the Macom, for his triumphant trip to the battery and thence through the heart of the city. Secrecy shrouded the place at which Lindbergh was to land in his own famous plane because officials feared the possibility of disastrous consequences from the unprecedented crowds that await him at every point of vantage.

Long before the hour which Lindbergh was scheduled to arrive, the slopes along the sea wall, the streets of lower Broadway, City Hall Park, Madison Square, Fifth avenue, and the thoroughfares feeding into them, were black with humanity. East side, west side, all around the town, the sidewalks of New York were jammed as never before in their history. Battery Park, where "Lindy" will first step ashore, was bulging with thousands of people fired with the ambition to be among the first to roar their welcome to the returning hero, idol of the nation and of the world.

From the battery Lindbergh, preceded by an escort of 10,000 troops, will move on through teeming masses of humanity to City Hall, where he will be presented with the medal of valor by Mayor Walker. And late this afternoon he will reach the climax of the day when he will receive from Governor Alfred E. Smith at Central Park the New York State medal of valor.

Two million people——perhaps 3,000,000 or more——will take an active part in the ovation to the courageous youth who three weeks and three days ago stepped into the cockpit of "The Spirit of St. Louis" at Roosevelt Field, Long Island, and blazed a glorious trail through the air from New York to Paris. There were only a few persons on the field when "Lindy" embarked on that epochal adventure in the chilled dawn of a damp morning but there will be millions waiting for him on his return today.

The lone eagle of the Atlantic returns laden with high honors. He is now Colonel Charles Lindbergh. He has walked with kings without having lost the common touch. He has been awarded the distinguished flying cross by the president of his country. He has heard the peoples of the world acclaim his achievement and nothing has turned his head. He comes back the same modest, shy-looking, boyish "Lindy."

Eight thousand policemen, half of the entire force of the city, were on duty this morning, charged with the big task of keeping the huge throngs in hand. Thirteen ambulances, manned with doctors and nurses, will be in readiness along the line of march, prepared for any emergency.

A cloudy sky, carrying the threat of rain, deterred no one.

EXPECT LENGEL WILL BE TRIED JULY 5; ARRAIGNED ON MONDAY

CANTON, O., June 13.—Former Chief of Police Saranus A. Lengel was to be arraigned here today, charged with first degree murder for alleged complicity in the slaying of Don R. Mellett, Canton publisher, last July.

Date of trial will probably be set for July 5, or shortly after that date.

Lengel was indicted, following submission of a statement to a special Stark County grand jury, by Floyd Streitenberger, ex-Canton detective, now serving a life term for his part in the crime.

Louis Mazer, Canton bootlegger, jointly indicted in the Mellett slaying, was to be taken to the penitentiary at Columbus either today or tomorrow. As reward for turning state's evidence, Mazer was allowed to plead guilty to manslaughter and sentenced to use his influence to effect Mazer's release at the end of five years, it was said.

Chicago Cooks, Rides, Sees, Thanks to Mr. Samuel Insull

By L. E. EARLY,
International Illustrated News Staff Correspondent.

CHICAGO (I-I-N)—Chicago cooks breakfast on Insull gas, rides to work on Insull cars, listens to Insull grand opera, reads by Insull electric lights and, say some, votes for candidates picked by Mr. Samuel Insull.

One of the most spectacular figures in American history has been brought to the fore again by a series of movements that ended with him in control of Chicago's street cars, bus lines and elevated railroads. For twenty years Chicago has talked about consolidation of traction. Figure after figure in politics and finance has attempted it. Recently the Aldermen spent $1,600,000 in trying to devise a plan, and just about the time that they had given up it was announced that Insull had made his own plan and put it into execution.

Insull came to America in 1880 as secretary to Thomas A. Edison. He was born in England, and had started out as an office boy, studying stenography in his spare time. He made the acquaintance of Edison's London manager, and he recommended that Edison send for the twenty-one-year-old youngster. Edison did.

Insull is a natural manager. He did everything for Edison, handling bond transactions and buying his neckties. He soon found himself organizing Edison's businesses, and in 1892 was made second vice-president of the General Electric Company.

A few months later he resigned to take over the presidency of a Chicago electric company. With this as a toehold he climbed rapidly up the heights he holds today. He extended his electric interests all over the middle West, he entered the gas business, taking over a Chicago company on the verge of bankruptcy and making it pay, he took over struggling electric lines and made them pay, and half a dozen other public utilities came under his control.

The Chicago Opera Company was losing money, and Insull was asked to save it. He Insullized it, and now it's one of the best financed companies in America.

As a contributor to political campaigns, Insull is one of nature's noblemen. Senatorial investigations have revealed that he's been very generous, contributing, in some instances to both sides of a single fight.

The public utility problem has always been linked with politics, and some see a connection between Insull's interest in politics and his latest coup. Whether there is or not, it's certain that Insull is now probably the most powerful man in the city today, and that he's unified the traction lines of Chicago, which Chicago has wanted for years.

COMPLETE SELL OUT OF ALUMNI BANQUET TICKETS FORESEEN

Figuratively speaking, "standing room only" will be available for the annual banquet of the Central High School Alumni Association Wednesday night at 6:15 at the school building, as indications point to complete "sell-out" of tickets for the affair.

A few tickets remain but these are being disposed of in short order and reservations should be made as quickly as possible to insure accommodations.

A short speaking program has been arranged in connection with the banquet, interspersed by group singing, after which the annual election of officers will be the closing feature.

Following the banquet, motion pictures will be shown in the auditorium by R. Hayes Hamilton, this city, travelogue lecturer. As an additional attraction, dancing will be enjoyed in the gymnasium with music supplied by a nine-piece supper club orchestra, that is making its appearance in Xenia for the first time.

RICH or POOR?

Young or old, all suffer from intestinal stasis (constipation). The cause can be told with one word—

That word is "Civilization"! It means "over-eating", "over-work", "worry" and "nerve enervation", wrong foods, wrong drinks! Not enough animal exercise, such as running, jumping, walking, climbing, etc.

The nervous force that should go to the bowel-nerves is taken by the brain or other parts of the body, to perform "civilized duties—or excesses."

Avoid all the causes you can! You can't avoid all of them, therefore you may need the aid of Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills, to nourish and tone-up the bowel-nerves; to stimulate the liver; to cleanse and purify the 32 feet of intestines where delayed activity has made poisons which cause biliousness, sick headache, irritable, grouchy feelings, and impaired efficiency in work or play.

Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills are non-secret, prompt, and pleasant. Sold by druggists for 25 years and "Better Than Castor Oil." 45 pills—30 cts.

HORSE SENSE!

TOLEDO, O.—Are horses, in a last effort to compete with the ubiquitous automobile, learning to interpret the signal lights, without aid from the drivers? So says the owner of a delivery wagon who left his horse standing outside the Nasby building. When he was inside the building, the light at Madison avenue and Huron St. (which had been set against Huron St.) changed and the stream of traffic moved. The unattended horse took one look at the light, saw the "Go" signal and started off at a canter. He made the turn on Madison avenue, taking no notice whatever of the shouts of pedestrians, who noticed the driverless vehicle. Reaching Madison avenue and Superior St., the signal was against him and he duly stopped. What might have happened after this will never be known, as the driver arrived and took charge.

HIMSELF

NIAGARA FALLS—Well, folks John Daley is back home again sure enough. You know, John just clean disappeared from this town a coupla months ago, and nobody ever did know what had become of him. Just vanished, hide and hair. There was a body picked up in a cinder pit over to the roundhouse that some folks said was John, but there never was anything sure about it, and it did seem like John's disappearance was one of them unsolved mysteries. Well, now, John's back, and the funny thing is that he's in jail. It seems like his folks went in the house the other evening, and here was a man asleep in the bed, where no man had any call to be by right. So the folks just telephoned the police station, and the cops run around to the house and here this stranger was John himself. Well, it seems like John was sort of full of likker, and the cops had made the trip anyway and not wanting to make a trip like that for nothing they pinched John for luck and because he was kind of lit up. Don't that beat all? get out?

Lewis Post, Women's Relief Corps, will give a program in the rooms in the Court House, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, in observance of Flag Day. Immediately following the program, the Corps will go to the Cemetery, where flowers will be placed on the graves of deceased members.

NEW CURE FOR DEAFNESS

ERIE, Pa.—There never were many deaf jewelers in this town and now there's one less, as the result of a novel, if somewhat drastic cure effected here yesterday. J. Wayne Haskel, the discoverer of this new method, was having a round of golf, when a ball hit him on the ear and knocked him cold. When he came to his hearing was completely restored.

SHE WENT FROM BAD TO WORSE

Down to 98 Pounds—Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cleveland, Ohio.—"After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so I tried it. After taking four bottles, I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble."—Mrs. M. RIESSINGER, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear, and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose? Wealth? Happiness?

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound may be the good fairy who offers you better health.

ST. BRIGID SENIORS URGED TO SERVICE BY SPEAKER SUNDAY

"You will not do much for yourself unless you do a great deal for your fellow man," the Rev. James Ward, St. Joseph Church, Dayton, told seven graduates of St. Brigid High School at commencement exercises held in connection with a solemn high mass at St. Brigid Church Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

The church was filled for the services which included the mass with the Rev. David Powers, pastor, as celebrant, the Rev. Father Ward as deacon and the Rev. Father Elbert, Dayton, sub-deacon, a processional of the graduates and other high school pupils and closed with benediction with the Blessed Sacrament.

Graduates and high school pupils sang the processional to organ accompaniment as they entered the church and the seniors were placed at individual kneeling benches in front of the sanctuary. Each senior was accompanied by a sponsor. The girl graduates were attired in white costumes of uniform design and their sponsors wore green frocks.

The Rev. Father Ward, beginning his address to the graduates, told them that commencement exercises at the mass was a fitting way to close the years of school work. Catholic education, he said, following the teachings of the Catholic church, teaches its children how to live and prepares them for death.

"Its education prepares the pupil mentally, morally and physically," he said. "Education without religion is not worthy of the name. While the Catholic church likes to see its children attain high places in the business wrold, is not averse to seeing them occupy prominent positions in the professions, yet the church has not so much regard for the temporal reward of her children as it has for their final destiny."

Closing he urged the graduates to "have a pure heart and clean intentions. You have been called to labor in the vineyard. Remember there is no one truly happy but those loving and serving the Master."

The seven graduates who received their diplomas were the Misses Helen Donovan, Elizabeth Killeen, Agnes Osborn and Pauline Scully and Leo Cain, James Kelble and John Geiger.

The choir sang the mass with special solo parts by Miss Eleanor McDonnell and Miss Ruth Galliger.

VALUE OF IDEALS TOLD SENIORS AT WILBERFORCE EXERCISES

"The Imperative Need of Imperial Ideals" was the subject discussed by Bishop W. A. Fountain, A. M., D. D., Atlanta, Ga., who delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the Wilberforce University graduating class, Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, in Jones Auditorium, Shorter Hall, where six hundred people gathered to attend the opening exercises of the sixty-fourth annual commencement of the oldest and largest colored educational institution of the country.

The general faculty, members of the graduating classes of the several departments of the school, and graduates of former commencements, met in the auditorium of Galloway Hall, and with President Gilbert H. Jones and Bishop W. H. Fountain at the head of the line, marched to Jones Auditorium.

Prof. Wm. A. Sykes, director of the musical department, was in charge of the musical program. Miss Grace Edwards, an assistant of the department, played the organ prelude, and the University Choral sang the opening hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy." Rev. R. B. Smith, presiding elder of the New Jersey Conference, offered the invocation and Dr. J. C. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn., read as the scripture lesson, Job 28:12-28. Miss Lucile Dean and Robert P. Ecton were the leading soloists. President Gilbert H. Jones introduced the speaker for the occasion, who opened his remarks by saying that Rome was the center of financial and governmental strength of the world.

"Here lived the world's greatest orators, Caesar, Cicero, and Hortenshius. Here lived the world's greatest poets, Virgil, Horace and Ovid. Here lived the world's greatest generals, Pompey, Caesar and Titus—all proudly boasted that they were Roman citizens. The man or people who found not their ideals somewhere in the confines of this imperial city was not worthy of his existence, according to the so-called best thought of the times.

"If an idea is a mental image, form, or a representation of anything," said the speaker, "then an idea is something existing in an idea or intellect, hence an ideal is the ego of a idea. Ideals are mental visions, pictures flung upon the sensitive plate of the mind as real as any ever thrown upon the canvass by a stereoptician, and out of ideals the characters of people or individuals are made.

"Men may sneer and say they are impossible, too high for every day use, but without them character is an impossible thing. The hope of my race, or any other race, is securely in Christian education and high ideals. The rising generation must be taught to admire the highest and purest in human conduct. Christian education, through imperial ideals will lead to 'golden conduct' by means of an unerring instinct. America has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectations of her most ardent admirers, because of her imperial ideals embodied in her constitution, but she has flagrantly disregarded those high ideals until her citizens cannot truthfully sing, 'That this is the land of the free, and the home of the brave.

"The business ideal of a race, should be pure and substantial. Some who leave these walls today perhaps will not be privileged to matriculate elsewhere; but in the busy, active world you must take your stand, and if you will observe the Golden Rule, 'Do unto others as you would have them to do unto you,' success awaits you in the battle of life."

At the conclusion of the discourse the class arose and received the following charge: "The age in which we live is strange and evil and full of hope. Great are art, science and religion, but these are in their embryonic state. The sweetest notes in music are yet to be discovered. The lost chord is yet to be found. This real Christian life, or the Christ life, has not yet been fully lived. The race and humanity must have first line defense. We believe you will not break faith with your people, that you will ever stand for high ideals keyed to efficiency. Remember the world stands aside for man or woman with an idea who knows where he or she is going. Will you as college people answer the call for service? May we depend on you as our first line defense to do our difficult and intricate thinking?"

In the afternoon the address to the religious societies and Greek lettered organizations was delivered by Rev. J. Acton Hill, of Louisville, Ky. Rev. J. C. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn., delivered the annual sermon to the graduating class of Payne Theological Seminary. At this meeting Dean George F. Woodson presided and the students attended in a body.

Monday evening at 8 o'clock, Rev. H. E. Stewart, W. Chicago, a former graduate of Payne Theological Seminary, will deliver the annual address to the Literary So-

BIBLE THOUGHT

ALMIGHTY GOD:—I will cry unto God most high; unto God that performeth all things for me. Psalm 57:2.

CHAMBERLIN'S FLIGHT

When Clarence Chamberlin landed safely in Germany with the Bellanca monoplane Columbia after a successful non-stop flight from Long Island over a record distance his achievement immediately took on great importance in its relation to the comity of nations as well as the progress of aviation. But in lauding this truly Yankee flier for his epochal achievement of not only crossing the ocean but penetrating so far into Europe as a village not far from Berlin one need not feel that the exploit in any way belittles that for which Washington and New York are in the throes of preparation to welcome home Charley Lindbergh, whose mastery of the Atlantic aerial crossing from New York to Paris always will remain distinctive as that of a "lone eagle" who dared and accomplished what previously had been generally considered an impossibility or something approaching the miraculous.

For Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine, the inexperienced navigator who had the hardihood to go along in that capacity, Germany is giving a welcome which eminently is their due. When Chamberlin grimly set Berlin and not Paris as his destination he showed the stuff he is made of. His arrival there proves him to be entitled to a niche in fame as one of the great airmen of all times.

The achievements of Lindbergh and Chamberlin probably are the forerunners of flights which will make crossing the Atlantic or the New York to Berlin journey by air attract little more attention than do present day crossings of the Atlantic by steamships.

But it took a Lindbergh and a Chamberlin to dispose of some of the bugaboos which have been retarding the development of aviation and their success, although undoubtedly aided by mechanical developments in recent years to promote the safety of piloting planes, is largely a tribute to their efficiency and courage as flying men.

BUSY LEGIONNAIRE

The busiest man in the United States isn't President Coolidge. That distinction today probably is held by John J. Wicker, Jr., national travel director of the American Legion France convention committee. The job of getting 30,000 Legionnaires ready for the "second A. E. F.," which is to invade Paris in September, is almost as tough a proposition as the war department had, when it was preparing to ship a couple of million doughboys "over there." Wicker has put in about three years on the Legion's forth-coming pilgrimage. Hitherto the largest peace-time migration of Americans to Europe was the bar association's trip in 1924. The Legion caravan will be ten times the size of the lawyers' lark. General Frank T. Hines, now director of the veterans' bureau, supervised the ocean movements of American troops during the World War, and has given Wicker the benefit of the army's experience in 1917 and 1918. Wicker is a Virginian, a lawyer, and had overseas experience in the air service.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON

by FRED C. KELLY

WHEN MONEY IS AN OBSTACLE

A great manufacturing concern with selling branches all over the United States, has been dissatisfied all this year with the reports from two large cities in New York state.

Sales have not been large in proportion to the number of salesmen employed and considering the size of the two cities.

Last week the high - salaried president of the company became personally curious about the situation in those two places and sent a keen-minded investigator to get the facts.

The answer was at first a little hard to discover. All the salesmen were exceptionally intelligent young men, each with a personality that should have been able to charm birds out of the trees. Yet they didn't close enough sales.

Finally the investigator stumbled upon an explanation. These young men were mostly well born. That is, they came mainly from established families characterized by intelligence and success. Their parents and grandparents had been successful enough in business or professions to accumulate comfortable fortunes.

Surely, one would think, it is from successful parents that successful salesmen should spring and that probably was the theory which had led the local sales manager to select the men he did.

But belonging to financial successful families proved to be the seat of the trouble with these young salesmen. They had inherited small legacies from their ancestors. Not only that, but such inherited funds had been carefully left in charge of competent trust companies—which isn't surprising, for men capable of making and saving money would naturally want to safeguard it in their wills. The young men didn't even have a chance to lose their money and take a fresh start.

Nearly every one of the salesmen investigated in two different branch agencies had an independent income from trusteed funds amounting to from $100 to $200 a month.

It is interesting to note that no one had more than $250 a month. The average was probably less than $150. These salesmen could hardly be called wealthy. They could not live in the style to which they were accustomed without working. But nevertheless, they had less concern about holding their jobs and making good than if they had been without other sources of income.

In other words, these well bred young salesmen were handicapped by lack of incentive.

Their money was a costly luxury. It is quite conceivable that they might have more money ten years from now, and have more fun getting it, if they had inherited none.

If you were a sales manager, would you care to have your selling force made up of young men having independent incomes, always sure of a living without working?

The Theatre

By FLEET SMITH

The current season in Hollywood has been good to the Cinderellas. At least three little "extra girls" have become stars this spring. Each of them went to Hollywood with no intention of going into pictures—oh no—and in just a short time had joined the throng of "extras." The latest star discovered lived at Chester, Ill., proving that there is no geographical handicap in getting into the pictures. Her name is Nora Lane and she went to Hollywood to visit a friend.

After an appearance as an extra she was signed to star as Fred Thomson's leading lady and will no doubt be seen in "The Life of Jesse James" which Thomson is to make for Paramount. Fay Wray and Sue Carol have had parallel experiences. The former, a Hollywood high school student was discovered by Erich Von Stroheim and after playing the lead in "The Wedding March" will appear opposite Emil Jannings in "Hitting For Heaven." Sue Carol is a Chicago girl and had never seen a studio until she went to Hollywood on a visit. She has just been selected to play the lead in Douglas MacLean's "Soft Cushions."

The exquisite Esther Ralston and her husband, George Webb, are in New York for the expressed purpose of closing their "honeymoon apartment," which they rented soon after their marriage, but never lived in, owing to the star's call to Hollywood. Miss Ralston rushed to New York upon the completion of "The Modern Commandaments" in which she is being starred by Paramount. On her way she stopped off at her gold mine in Arizona to pan a little gold. One should always tarry a moment at a gold mine before starting on a Fifth Ave. shopping tour.

While discussing the thrills of panning nuggets and pay dirt, Miss Ralston was asked by the writer what she thought of gold diggers in general and the possibility of her being cast as "Lorelei" in the film version of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

"There is such a vast difference between digging gold in Arizona and gold digging on Broadway that I do not feel qualified to discuss the latter occupation," she said. Miss Ralston said that although she had frequently been mentioned for the part by "her public," she did ont crave the role as she did not believe she could properly portray the typical American gold-digging blonde.

Pola Negri and her husband, Prince Serge Mdivani, recently married in France, have returned to America. The Princess announced to reporters in New York that she would continue to be Miss Negri to her friends and in fact, to everybody. She wants it known that she did not marry a title and that she is supremely in love. The Prince does not want to be known as Mr. Pola Negri, neither does he want to retain his title. He is very much American and a splendid fellow. Following his impoverishment resulting from the Russian revolution, he came to America and with his brother entered college, where they were very popular. His brother married Mae Murray. On her return to Hollywood Miss Negri will resume her work in pictures for Paramount. Her next, "Barbed Wire," is said to reveal her at her best. This picture was directed by Rowland V. Lee.

SIGNIFICANT SAYINGS OF THE DAY

"Legislation, not only in New Jersey, but in all of the other states, and in the nation itself, has reached a condition which is startling, if not alarming. It is against this volume of laws that I am making a plea that in the future we have fewer and better laws. It will be found many times that the remedy to social evils can be obtained with no new legislation whatever, and may be cured by applying some of the fundamental rules of common law, which we now possess."—William T. Read, president New Jersey State Bar association.

What starts cancer, we do not know, but we do know that at first it is purely local, and easily removable. It is a local lesion. Take away the disease spot and the patient is cured. There are thousands of people, leading ordinary, normal lives, who have been cured."—Dr. Arthur H. Evans, cancer specialist, Westminster Hospital.

We shall also take up the question of the high cable tolls that keep down the volumes of news from the Orient."—Dr. Henry Suzallo, former president University of Washington.

Little Old New York

NEW YORK June 13.—At a club the other night a writer was complaining that his financial worries were so great that he could not get his mind on his work, and so his financial condition was getting steadily worse.

"Nonsense," said a successful publisher. "Don't you know that all of the finest poetry and the best literature are produced by poets and novelists living on crumbs in garrets?"

"I know nothing of the kind," answered the writer. "If what you say were true, the present state of American literature should be more flourishing in undying masterpieces; for you publishers are disposed to ration us with crumbs."

At the corner of Fifth avenue and Fifty-ninth street yesterday I saw a maroon colored limousine of foreign make, the tonneau of which had no side windows and only two small, oval windows, one in the front and one in the back. The chauffeuer, of course, sat in a seat in front; but the owner of the car was entirely shut off from the stares of the vulgar.

This limousine looked somewhat like an expensive and luxurious armoured car, and it attracted a swarm of people as it waited at the curb. I stood for some time, hoping to see the owner come out of a shop and get into it. I did this because I wanted to make up my mind as to one of the two possible reasons that, it occurred to me, any one should have a car especially designed like that. One of the reasons might be that the owner is a snob who does not wish to look upon the common mob or have the common mob look at her or him. The other reason might be that the owner was physically so afflicted that he or she did not wish to be gazed upon. I never found out which was the true reason.

The importance of timeliness in reading matter and the importance of not being ahead of the public taste is strikingly exemplified in the great sale of "The New Medical Follies," by Dr. Morris Fishbein. This book is a best seller among the non fiction books.

The first chapter, which runs to nearly three-quarters of the book, is an encyclopedia of the fake cures, quackeries and psycho-therapies of the medical world. Eleven years ago H. L. Mencken published almost precisely the same list, and a much more extensive one than Dr. Fishbein's, as a supplement to "A Book of Burlesques." Mencken called it "A Genealogical Chart of the Uplift."

Mencken got $100 in advance royalties on the "'Book of Burlesques," out of which he had to pay a stenographer for typing the book $40. About a year's work netted him, then, about $60. During the intervening eleven years, however, his books have become very profitable sellers. And it is a satisfaction to note that first editions of "A Book of Burlesques" are so rare and so much in demand that they bring almost as much per copy as was Mencken's profit out of the book the first year it was issued.

The number of men (?) with make-up on their faces seems to be increasing in the neighborhood of Times Square, and is making that district more and more distasteful to normal people. These mincing creatures have their eyebrows plucked, their eyelids blacked with mascara, their cheeks and lips rouged. It is bad enough to see how much the women on Broadway are over-painted and overmade up. Some of the younger women look like circus clowns, with their faces powdered dead white, their eyebrows made artificially long with a black pencil, and their lips painted very thick. But these painted sissy boys make one want to rush for the fire-axe.

A new development in the night life of Broadway is the terror that has been struck into the hearts of some of the newspaper men who make their living by writing about the theaters, the night clubs and the life of Broadway. Two or three newspaper men who have pictured the life of the night clubs as not quite as decorous as a Sunday school picnic have been waylaid and beaten up by thugs presumably in the employ of night club operators or in the employ of gunmen who are among the big spenders at the night clubs.

There was a time when two or three small publications battened upon blackmailing anyone connected with Broadway who was thought to be drawing down a decent salary or making a fair living. Scandal was cooked up about them or inneuendoes prepared in proof form for insertion in the magazines. The editor of the publication would then send the proof around to the victim and tell him or her that unless the victim kicked in with a full page advertisement, the libellous paragraph would be printed.

The libel laws were evaded by subterfuges like that of asking a question of a scandalous nature, and not giving the answer. To frame the same insinuation as a statement would be libellous under the law, but a question would not be. Libel suits were brought, but the editor would always show himself insolvent, and the victim could not recover even in the event of winning the suit. Reputations were blasted, disgraceful insinuations were made without any apparent foundation. It is true that one such editor was caught in attempted blackmail and that he spent a term in Atlanta prison; but the graft seemed to have died out.

Now there exists the other extreme. A commentator on Broadway night life may not publish legitimate news without incurring the possibility of being beaten up by hired thugs.

How to Achieve Beauty

SUMMER HAIR PROBLEM

I have told you before that the texture of the scalp follows, to a considerable degree, the texture of the skin; that is, it is either normal, dry or oily, and summer, with its outdoor life and scorching sun brings hair problems to all but to some in greater degrees than others.

If you possess an oily scalp you will not have as great a problem as the woman with a dry scalp, as the heat of the summer drys, to a considerable degree, the natural oils and you will do well to remember that the damage of the hot weather and drying winds will be considerable unless you counteract it with minute care.

So during the summer season, with its joy and freedom of outdoor life in such great abundance, you must redouble your energies in hair attention.

Be diligent with your brushing, use good stiff brushes and plenty of vim and vigor behind them. Whether the hair is long or short, brush it long and brush it often.

Because I have spoken of the drying effects of summer sun and winds do not misunderstand me and think I do not approve of sunlight and air for the hair, because I most heartily do, and they are among the greatest tonics. I am simply warning you against the excesses that are always criminal—such as going for any length of time without a hat while sitting, standing or walking in the broiling sun. The right knid of summer air is as good for the hair as too much scorching sun is bad.

Pale blonde hair, especially, should not be exposed to the direct rays of the summer sun, or it will be inclined to take on a lifeless hue.

However, sunning and airing the hair in the right way is most beneficial. For instance, it will do your hair lots of good, no matter what type of scalp you possess, if you stand or sit in the open window on a summer morning when the sun is streaming in and let the life-giving rays of the sun pour their energy and vitality into your hair and the air sweep through it. If your hair is long you should loosen it and let it fall down over your shoulders and back so that the sun and air can penetrate and if your hair is bobbed, you should shake and ruffle your short locks. The hair will respond to this sun and air treatment as a wilting flower to a summer rain.

SNEEZING

I suppose someone will say: "What does sneezing amount to?" My reply would be: "A great deal."

It is a very important procedure; it may mean the spreading of disease and its subsequent development in hundreds of cases, and may even lead to the sacrifice of many lives.

If that is so, it is neither insignificent nor unimportant. When the ends of certain nerve fibers in the nose and throat are irritated or stimulated, the immediate response is a sneeze. This irritation may be produced in a variety of ways, by a draught of air, by tickling with a feather, a pinch of snuff, dust of almost any kind, the pollen of certain plants, and any of these, or irritants of many other varieties reaching certain portions of the mucous membrane of the nose, will at once excite a more or less violent attack of sneezing.

The same thing takes place when certain portions of the throat are irritated by food or drink that is too hot or too cold, by any substance that is rough and irritating or even by certain emotions.

Snezing is not confined to any age or period of life, but of course the mucous membrane of some people is much more sensitive than that of others. This explains why some have colds or hay fever or nasal catarrh all the time, while others are comparatively or entirely free from it.

It is perfectly evident that the tendency to attacks of sneezing is inherited with a great many individuals, for they manifest it with almost the first breath they draw after coming into the world. What happens in sneezing? Usually a more or less prolonged inhalation, opening of the mouth, elevation of the tongue and pressure upon the teeth or palate, and then an explosive exhalation which may be repeated any number of times, according to the intensity of the impression and the sensitiveness of the mucous membrane. With some, the sneezing is unattended by any discharge, but with the majority of people there is an emission of fluid or vapor from the mouth, frequently from the nose, and very often from the eyes.

Now the mouth and nose constantly contain a great variety of bacteria and it often happens that some of these bacteria are of a virulent character.

The person carrying them may be immune to them at the time or perhaps permanently.

But suppose such a person sneezes in the presence of somebody who is susceptible and liberates a swarm of these germs which are at once taken up by the one who is susceptible. This is not theory nor imagination, for it has happened repeatedly. Therefore, the point which I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can, is that whenever there is an inclination to sneeze, the mouth and nos should immediately be covered with a handkerchief or something which is equally effective and protective.

It is not polite nor decorous, and is certainly ill-mannered to spray a person with the moisture of sneezing, but worse than that is the possibility of liberating germs which may be the means of doing harm to others.

Police Raid Reserves' Winning Streak; Divide Two

Result Leaves Loop Leadership Still Unsettled Between Dayton Police And Xenia—Locals May Withdraw

RESERVES' WINNING streak of seven in a row was smashed by the Dayton Police Sunday afternoon at Washington Park, the minions of the law winning the first game of a double-header 8 to 4 while the Reserves earned an even break by winning the aftermath 7 to 4 in seven innings.

By dividing the twin bill, the two clubs continue in a tie for leadership of the Buckeye League with indications the deadlock will not be broken until such a time as a third meeting is scheduled later in the season.

Up until the Sunday bargain attraction, neither club had lost a game this season.

Misplays afield cost the Reserves the opening contest. Payton, who lost his first game of the year, and the veteran Lape, staged a pretty hurler's battle for seven innings but with victory in their grasp, the locals went to pieces in the field in the eighth inning, the coppers scoring five runs on three hits, five errors and a mixture of dumb and indifferent baseball.

Keifer led the Reserve batting, punching out a single and home run. The circuit smash came with one on base in the third inning. Tangeman and Scott also cracked out two hits. Gaylor led the Police with a double, single and walk.

Hits of the long distance variety won the closing game for the Reserves, together with the brilliant support accorded Cyphers in the field. The final affair was a revelation, for whereas the local nine fielded raggedly in the opener, exactly the contrary was the case in the nightcap and Cyphers was saved time and again by marvelous support.

Tangeman pounded out a home run and triple, the Reserve shortstop a triple and double and Keifer a long triple. Reserves were outhit in both games, 8 to 6 in the opener and 9 to 8 in the second contest.

The management of the local club will attend a conference of league officials Monday night and it will be decided at this time whether the Reserves will remain in the circuit or withdraw.

STRANGER WAS JOHN, HIMSELF

NIAGARA FALLS—Well, folks, John Daley is back home again, sure enough. You know, John just clean disappeared from this town a coupla months ago, and nobody ever did know what had become of him. Just vanished, hide and hair. There was a body picked up in a cinder pit over to the roundhouse that some folks said was John, but there never was anything sure about it, and it did seem like John's disappearance was one of them unsolved mysteries. Well, now, John's back, and the funny thing is that he's in jail. It seems like his folks went into the house the other evening, and here was a man asleep in the best bed, where no man had any call to be by right. So the folks just telephoned the police station, and the cops run around to the house, and here this stranger was John, himself. Well, it seems like John was sort of full of likker, and the cops had made the trip anyway, and now wanting to make a trip like that for nothing they pinched John for luck and because he was kind of lit up. Don't that beat all get out?

DOUBLE HEADERS ON PROGRAM OF LEAGUE

Double-headers were the order of the day in the Buckeye League Sunday afternoon, because several contests scheduled for earlier in the season were postponed because of rain.

Bellbrook and the Osborn Miami Cements split two games at Osborn, the visitors winning the first 5 to 3 and Osborn the second 1 to 0.Both games were pitchers' battles.Osborn won the second game in the last half of the ninth round.

Xenia Reserves and Dayton Police broke even in a double-header at Xenia, leaving the league leadership still undecided.

His wife was in a critical condition for weeks. She obtained a divorce while he was a fugitive.

THEN and NOW

Twenty years ago Charles Albert Bender, a chief of the Chippewas, started in winning more glory for his face on the diamond than his forefathers had won on the battlefield. He's shown as he looked when he started in winning games for the Athletics and as he looks today.

BAYLIFFS DIVIDE DOUBLE HEADER IN TRIANGLE CONTEST

Bowersville Bayliffs broke even in a double-header with Wilmington on the latter's diamond Sunday afternoon in the Triangle League, losing the first 1 to 0 and copping the final 13 to 1.

Both contests were originally limited to seven innings, but the first game was forced into an extra inning.

The Bayliffs were held to one hit by D. Shadley in the first game, a safety by N. Murrell. Helky was almost as good, yielding four hits, three of which were bunched for the winning tally in the eighth round.

The second game was an easy victory. Helky bettered his previous game by allowing only two hits and one run, while Shadley failed to repeat his wonderful performance of the opening game and was soon batted out of the box.

Wilmington used five hurlers in the nightcap, all of whom were ineffective.

Bowersville will play the league-leading Spring Valley nine next Sunday, June 19 at 3 p. m. The game will be played at Wilmington. This will be the first meeting with the leaders this season.

In another Triangle League game Sunday, Spring Valley retained its position by defeating Jamestown 9 to 8 in ten innings.

AUTO CAMPAIGN IS COSTLY TO PASTOR

OTTAWA, O., June 13.— The automobile industry chalked up another victory here today when the Rev. Frank M. Karns resigned pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church departed for Toledo to engage in private pursuits.

The Rev. Karns disagreed with his congregation, and is reported to have opposed automobile riding especially when it was not necessary for church purposes. His parishioners said he termed it an instrument of the devil in the hands of ordinary persons.

The church will dispense with the services of a pastor until after the West Ohio Methodist Conference next fall.

CRACKERS ARE GREAT: MAKE BOW LEGS STRAIGHT

CHICAGO.—H. E. Van Norman is a man exceeding smart and wise; he knows his p's, he knows his q's, he also knows his l's. As long as fashion's foibles dictate skirts so very brief, the girls whose legs are not so straight are filled with woe and grief; for a girl's legs may be crooked, and if fashions are concealing it matters not at all, but now, when dresses are revealing each maiden's limbs to all the world, Dame Fashion's hardest blows are showered on the flapper who must show her beau her bows. Now comes H. E. Van Norman with advice that's smart and sage: "Eat more good food," he tells the girls, "and then you'll be the rage. More calories and vitamines will make your bowlegs straight; lunch every day on crackers, and you'll be feeling great." Thus comes true science once again to dry up human tears, and for H. E. Van Norman all the bowlegged girls shout "Cheers!"

THESE ARE THE ANSWERS TO THE QUESTIONS ON PAGE FOUR

1. President Poincare of France has announced that he hoped to get better debt settlement terms from the United States.
2. Clarence Chamberlin and Charles Levine have formulated a plan to invest $2,000,000 in establishing a transatlantic commercial airplane line.
3. Richmond, Va., reports an earthquake shock which rocked houses, but caused no serious damage, at 2:17 a. m. June 10.
4. On June 10 Commander Francesco de Pinedo, Italian intercontimental flyer, started from the Azores on his flight back to Italy.
5. Ray and Roy de Autremont, twin brothers, were arrested in Steubenville, O., for a train robbery in Oregon after a four-year search.
6. The National Broadcasting company hooked up the largest number of broadcasting stations ever put on the air in reporting Captain Lindbergh's reception at Washington.

It happens that one of the most novel of a myriad of suggestions for enduringly honoring Lindbergh comes from Mrs. Coolidge's own town. The Vermont State Chamber of Commerce, at Burlington, proposes that some American composer worthy of the task proceed to write a Lindbergh "flight symphony." The chamber says: "Well has it been observed that words fail to express what needs to be expressed in connection with Lindbergh's achievement. Nothing could be more musical than that indescribable flight, the perfect personality of the flier, and the great recognition of a great event by the people of France. What movements there could be in such a symphony after the perilous taking-off flight over land and sea, by a lone aviator, with a whole world thinking about him—flight by day and by night, and finally a burst of light and an ovation by a whole people."

Political Washington paused in the midst of its Lindbergh complex to gasp over the little "run-in" between President Coolidge and Senator Smoot on the question of a special session of congress. The G. O. P. high priest from Utah emerged from the executive sanctum and authorized the statement that the president would convene congress in October. No sooner had that word been winged to the country than Mr. Coolidge issued a devastating denial. It was accompanied by the stern assertion that when there was anything to announce about a special session, the president would be his own broadcaster. Nobody imagines that the White House meant to rebuke the all-powerful chairman of the senate finance committee. But it isn't the first time that Mr. Coolidge has taken occasion publicly to resent the periodic practice of callers to tell the world what they gleaned at his desk before he was ready to have it known.

North Carolina Republicans, who are probably the most numerous of their breed anywhere in Dixie are to the front with the very newest thing under the 1928 sun. One of their spokesmen, rhapsodizing over the action of Governor Fuller, of Massachusetts, in appointing a committee to investigate the Sacco-Vanzetti case, deposes and says that it's big enough to earn Fuller national recognition. He therefore proposes that Republican history could well afford to repeat itself next year, whereby the presidential ticket would be headed by an Ohioan and tail-ended by a son of the Bay State—as it was in 1920. To that end he suggests Nicholas Longworth for president, and Alvan T. Fuller for vice president.

Ever since it became known that Senator Borah, Demosthenes of congress, has been reduced to a whisper by an operation for tonsilitis, Washington wags have hastened to say that everything Vice President Dawes wants to accomplish could be accomplished by removing tonsils on both sides of the senate aisle. Newspapers all over the country are now printing an advertisement bearing the photograph and autograph of Senator Curtis, of Kansas, administration leader in the senate. The advertisement recommends a certain brand of cigarets, and Curtis suggestively observes that nearly all senators smoke cigarets and find, to their joy, that the habit does not affect their voices.

Senor Honorio Pueyrredon, the ambassador of Argentina at Washington, is in the midst of an extensive tour of study in the agricultural areas of the middle west. He decided to spend his vacation that way instead of indulging, as most of his ambassadorial confreres at this season do, in the luxury of holidays on some fashionable seashore. Senor Pueyrredon will travel from coast to coast by automobile. His family is in the party and the caravan consists of two cars. The ambassador will inspect wheat farms, cattle ranches, sugar-beet plantations, fruit orchards and department of agriculture experimental stations. He's particularly interested in Uncle Sam's fight on the corn-borer and on hog cholera. Among several members of congress who paved the way for the Argentinian diplomat's expedition is Senator Kendrick, of Wyoming, who is one of the country's great stock growers.

Ambassador Houghton is tarrying in Washington on leave from the Court of St. James' at London. Our envoy to Great Britain is found by capital correspondents conspicuously less communicative than he was in the spring of 1926, when Mr. Houghton's observations on the European situation created a near-crisis "over there" and a storm in the United States senate. Private affairs largely, the ambassador asserts, brings him home at this time. The forty-first reunion of his Harvard class is one of the Houghton missions on native heath. The ambassador is loud in praise of Lindbergh's bearing in England. "He's a boy of whom we can all be very proud," Mr. Houghton avers, "for he has received honors unprecedented and kept his head."

"The Making of a Law," is the title of an informative address to be delivered next week by Mrs. Martha R. Gold, secretary to United States Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, in Kansas City. Her forum will be the national convention of the Kappa Beta Pi legal sorority. Mrs. Gold, in her non-secretarial incarnation, is a lawyer. Seventeen senators now have woman secretaries. Two of them voted in the senate against woman suffrage—Borah and Moses. The baby senator "Young Bob" LaFollette, is one of the solons who are secretaried by young women. The bobbed-haired group, which now has a gallery to itself in the senate, contains some of the shrewedest politicians on Capitol hill.

The Rovin' Ritzies
By Flo Frederick

The Ritzies say, "Come over,"
But not without a clover.

Bill Roscoe was soon to be taken into the Ritzie club. Even if he wanted to he couldn't have forgotten about it for one minute. His classmates were constantly eyeing him from behind their books or writing notes to each other and then looking at him significantly.

It was the second day since Bill had kept his appointment at the Ritzie carpenter shop and received instructions to speak to none of his friends under any circumstances. He had stuck to his promise to keep silence and his classmates had learned better than to tease him about it after their encounter with Marty and the twins on the day before. They were now busy watching for what would happen next, and scarcely for a minute did they let Bill out of their sight.

Even Bill was beginning to get a little worried for fear that something had gone wrong. The Ritzies had promised to send him instructions but no one had appeared with a message of any kind. His thoughts were interrupted by the ringing of the bell and his class was soon passing out into the cloakroom. He had just taken his cap off the hook when he felt a tug at his sleeve and whirled about to find a girl from one of the lower grades looking up at him.

"Are you Bill Roscoe?" she asked.

"Yes," answered Bill, anxious to get rid of her before his classmates saw her and started teasing.

The little girl only smiled an answer, slipped a note into his hand and disappeared around the corner of the stairs. Bill slipped the note into his shirt and took a swift look around to see if he was being watched. It was bad enough being teased about keeping silence, but to be seen receiving a note from a girl would be the last straw. His classmates had been engaged in a heated argument and the incident had escaped unnoticed. It was with a sigh of relief that Bill unfolded the scribled note and read:

"Initiation ceremony at 4:30 at the Ritzie clubroom. Knock three times, pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole door and you will be admitted at once. Remember, you are still in silence."

"Pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole," repeated the stupified Bill. Why, he had never found a four-leaf clover in his whole life! If he could only ask one of his best friends to help him find one; but he was still on silence. There was nothing for it but to do his best, and he started out on the run for a patch of clover that he had often noticed on his way to school.

Squatting down in the midst of the big clover bed, he turned the little green flowers over one by one, hoping to find an extra leaf. Once he found a five-leafed clover and considered tearing off one of the leaves, but was afraid the Ritzies would detect it so he cast it aside and hunted harder than ever for a four-leafed one. There were only fifteen minutes left and he couldn't appear at the carpenter shop without it!

He was so busy with his task that he hadn't noticed the circle of boys that had gathered around the clover patch. They were gazing at him in wonderment. Had he gone mad? Why would any one be pawing over a patch of grass like that unless something had gone wrong with his thinking machine! The boys were about to take pity on him and hurry him home to a doctor, when, with a sudden shout of glee, Bill jumped to his feet, dashed through the circle of boys, scarcely noticing them, and tore down the street, holding something aloft in his hand. The boys were more stupefied than ever at this and gave it up as a hopeless mystery. The Ritzies had always been too much for them to understand, and now old Tubby Bill was getting the same way.

Bill didn't stop to catch his breath until he reached the carpenter shop door. He wrapped three times and the porthole flung open. Proudly he handed in his four-leaf clover and waited breathlessly to see what would happen.

Read in tomorrow's story what happens to Bill after the Ritzies get him inside the carpenter shop.

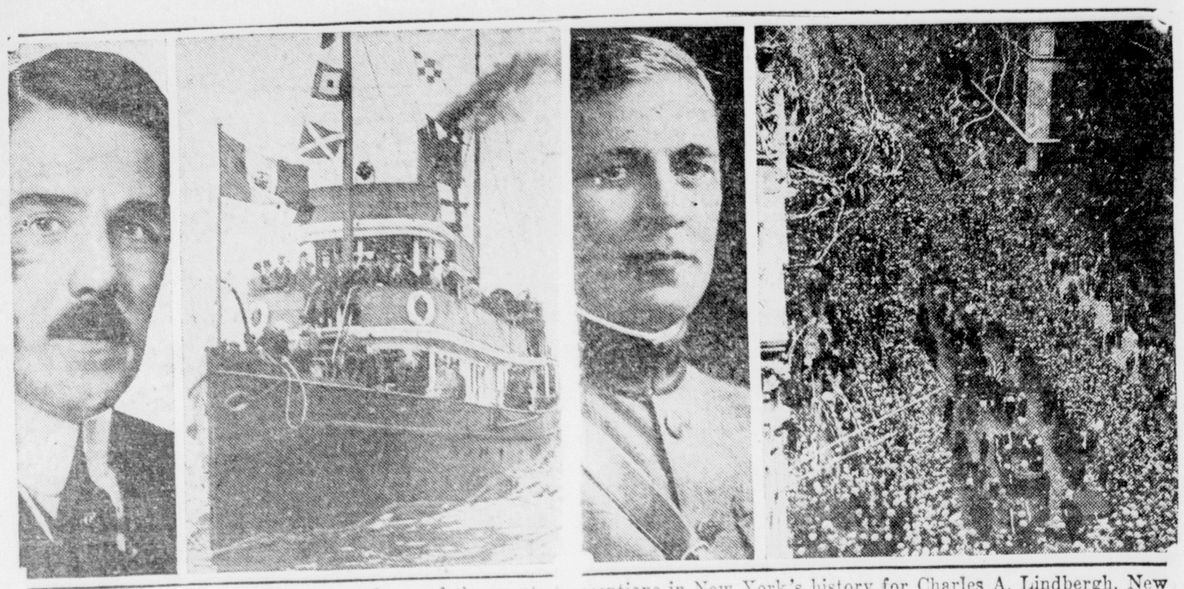
New York Holds Reception For Colonel Lindbergh



Grover A. Whalen, left, prepared one of the greatest receptions in New York's history for Charles A. Lindbergh, New York to Paris hopper. The tug Macom will bring him to the Battery. From that point, with Major General William N. Haskell as grand marshal, Lindbergh will move in triumphal procession to the City Hall, amid showers of confetti and ticker tape and the applause of the crowd.

Mayor James J. Walker will receive the flier at the City Hall. The crowd will be thickest at that point, and every square foot of ground and every bit of window space will be utilized for a view of the flier. In connection with the reception, New York will stage one of the greatest aerial parades in histo ry. Two hundred planes, of every size and description, will fly over the length of the city, making a sight unsurpassed in the p ast.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED:

The entrance of America into the World war finds Phillip Wynne Tracy IV suffering from the collapse of his first passionate love affair. Before this he had had a childish engagement with Natlee Jones.

Phil and Rod are the first to enlist. They go to a training camp.

Finally the regiment is ordered back to New York, presumably bound for France. While in New York Phil meets Natlee and their love flaming anew, they plan to be married. The immediate departure of the troops, however, prevents this.

Phil's regiment is sent to the front soon after arriving in France and Phil is detailed on an extremely dangerous mission. Returning with important information he is wounded and Rod is killed trying to save his friend. Phil wakes in a hospital and receives the croix de guerre for bravery. Letters from his mother and Natlee only depress him.

At length he rejoins his outfit in the Argonne woods, but he looks so ill that he is sent to a motor school in the south of France. Three days after his arrival, armistice is declared.

CHAPTER XL

ANNE PLANS TO SEEK PHILLIP

THE order came on Christmas Day for Phil to go up into Germany, but it was not to his old outfit.

It was good, nevertheless, to be among the Americans again, for he was a part of the victorious army that was stationed at Coblenz and near about. He wrote to his mother and Natlee, but he had been moved about so much he was not sure they had gotten his letters—at least he had not heard from them since he left the hospital.

Many a German girl attracted by his smile told him, sometimes in words and sometimes by actions, that she was ready to practice Christian charity and forgive her enemy.

Phillip Wynne Tracy IV, however, told himself that his flirting days were over. Not one of these flaxon-haired girls ever gave him the intimation of the slightest thrill.

Once in a while one of them whose hair was yellower than the others would make him think of the lovely corn-silk bands about Natlee's head, and he would long once again to let his fingers thread its soft mass.

He picked up some lovely Russian lapis lazuli beads and a pair of earrings because he thought they would match Natlee's eyes.

For them he gave the last dollar he had, for he had not had any money from home since he left America. If his mother had sent it, it had miscarried.

Again he was ashamed to hang around when the mail was distributed. He grew to feel that there was something almost sinister about his name, which made it one no one wished to repeat.

At last one day, on the bulletin board, he read that a number of young American soldiers who had had two years of college and who could produce 250 francs could have five months' work at one of the different universities in England and France.

How he wished he had made up his conditions and entered the university at Christmas, as his mother had wanted him to do. How he wished he had really saved the money he had paid for the lapis lazuli beads he had purchased for Natlee.

However, Phillip had never been discouraged by any obstacles if he wished to do anything very much.

He made his application, saying that he had the requisite requirements and education.

"It is perfectly preposterous to think for a moment that among the other boys in my regiment I will be singled out from those who deserve it more," he said to himself cynically, "but it will be amusing to see hoy many lies I can make up for myself."

ANNE HUNTINGTON TRACY all her life dreaded when the anniversary of Armistice Day came around, for on the day that the war was declared over she was in the Walter Reid hospital at Washington, only conscious that the whole world was determined to make as much noise as possible.

"Tell them to be still!" she would shriek with her hands over her ears. "Tell them to be still. I cannot bear it."

Her nurse tried to tell her that all Washington was holding jubilee because the guns had stopped firing and the killing of human beings had ceased—but Anne Tracy did not understand.

"The noise is killing me. Please ask them to stop," she kept begging.

For three days she had been delirious with flu, and the glorious thrill which came from seeing thousands upon thousands of men and women going mad with joy, she did not know.

Even after the flu had run its course, her brain, overtaxed with the agony of suspense, refused to function normally.

John Aukland bent over Anne and lightly kissed her hair.

Every noise that could not be kept from her room seemed to be torture to her. She repeated constantly, "Tell them to stop the machine guns"—or "the shell"—as the noise might be heavy or slight.

She had intervals when she would ask quite sanely, "Have you heard from Phil since he went back to the Argonne?" Then before they could answer her mind would wander, and she might speak as though the war was something she knew nothing about.

It was the last of January before Major Aukland or any one else was able to see her.

Then he had to take to her the distressing news that nothing had been heard from her son since the armistice.

"I do not think anything has happened to Phil, Anne," he said, "but I have been trying very hard to get some news from him ever since you have been ill."

The pale and wasted woman on the bed turned such anguished eyes upon him that he fairly picked her up in his arms saying, "Dear, dearest Anne, as soon as you are able, I will take you to Germany, for that is probably where he is. Anne, it breaks my heart to see you grieve. Will you not let me comfort you a little? Anne, dear, you know there has never been another woman in my life but you. I loved you before you married the father of your boy. Anne, be my wife, and we will go together to hunt him.

"You have years before you in which to be happy. Let me help to make them so," he pleaded.

"John, you are more than good to me," she said gently. "I am afraid I have spoiled your life. But for me, you might now have had wife and children."

"Dear Anne, do you not know that you are worth waiting for? Say that you will make me wait no longer. Let us be married immediately."

"I know why you are urging haste, John. In your unselfish love, you want to take care of me. I confess that being taken care of looks very good to me, but I cannot marry anyone until my boy is found.

"Think, dear, I may find him maimed in such a way that he will need my whole care. If that should be so, I could not ask you to share it with me, for I must not keep from you the fact that although I am very fond of you, yet Phillip will always come first."

"But, dearest Anne, what if you find your son perfectly well? Do you not know that some time, sooner or later he will leave you for some young girl? Anne, you have been alone all your life, and yet you are the one woman I have ever met who enjoys—yes, needs — companionship most.

"Darling, don't send me away from you again. I know I can make you happy."

MAJOR Aukland had been holding her in his arms as he would a child. Her head was on his breast. Now he laid her back gently and pulled the covers up under her chin.

Anne found his care and sympathy very comfortable. With a sigh almost of content she cuddled down into her pillows.

Major Aukland sat down beside her bed and took the one hand which was lying inertly outside the coverlet in his.

"Then, dear, I can begin to make arrangements to leave on the Mauretania the last of next week. With me to take care of you on the trip across. I know you will be well enough to go. I'll see the doctor now."

He started toward the door.

"Wait, John," Anne's voice, though weak, was decisive. The man came back to the bed and stood looking down upon her.

"I hope I will be well enough to start across the last of next week, but John, dear John, please do not press me for my answer until I have seen Phillip."

"You do not care for me, Anne?"

"Yes, dear, I do, but neither you nor I would be happy if Phil did not approve."

"He has no right to object," broke in the major, hotly. "For 20 years you have given up your life for him. Now you owe something to yourself."

"I am not quite sure, John, just what you mean by 'you owe something to yourself.' Do you mean that I must try and be happy? You should know that I could not be even content if I were estranged in any way from Phil. No, I do not mean that exactly, for I may not approve of his opinions or his actions in the future any more than I have done in the past, but I probably will not let him know it.

"In the short time I was married to his father I made the mistake of letting him see that I disapproved. I have come to the conclusion that even now, after the war, we women must still get from the men we love the things we want by our personality—which I am hearing a great many people call our 'sex appeal'—or by our diplomacy—never by the reason and righteousness of our desires.

"John, this little visit we have had this morning has been rather tragic, for it has shown me, and it must have shown you also, that we are old.

"When one reasons over the right or wrong of love, one is too old to love singly—or if young, it shows one is not interested.

"If we had been young, you would have picked me up and carried me away by the sheer force of your passion instead of talking it over with me as you have done. Get me the tickets for the trip, dear John, but let it be on some boat which sails a day or two after the 'Mauretania. We will meet in Paris."

"And I shall lose out, dear Anne, with the son, as I did years ago when we were young—with the father. However, I'll do as you wish, dear, and if I cannot have you for my wife, I will never put any other woman in the place I have always wanted you to fill."

John Aukland bent over Anne and lightly kissed her hair and left the room. As Anne turned away that the nurse might not see her face, she thought, "Oh, John, I wish you had kissed my lips and taken me in spite of any objections I might have made."

BAD MOVIES, MAMA SPANK!

BALLABOOSA, Ga.—Mrs. Mary H. Lloyd, who is 80 years old, understands now what is wrong with the younger generation. For four score years she got along without going to the movies. The other evening she attended her first motion picture performance, and the wickedness of the world was at once made plain. "No wonder girls are wild," said Mrs. Lloyd after the show. "If I had a daughter who went to any such place as a motion picture theater I'd turn her over my knee and spank her." The picture which so aroused the matriarch's wrath was Harry Langdon's comedy, "The Strong Man." It was produced under the auspices of the local W. C. T. U.

NEW YORK HAS NEW HONORS FOR ACE

LINDBERGH FORCED TO USE SUBSTITUTE PLANE FOR JOURNEY

Trans-Atlantic Ship Out Of Order—Strong Wind Bolws

WASHINGTON, June 13.—With a wave of his hand and a cheery grin, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh sent a speedy army pursuit plane into the air at Bolling Field at 8:54 o'clock this morning—bound for New York and another tremendous homecoming celebration.

A last minute bit of hard luck forced the youthful flyer to abandon his trans-Atlantic plane "The Spirit of St. Louis" on the field, and take an army plane for the two-hour journey.

The "St. Louis" didn't tune up right when mechanics started the motor. The trouble was a faulty cylinder, a "sweaty cylinder" they call it in the air service, and upon the advice of brother flyers at the field, Lindbergh reluctantly decided to accept a substitute plane it was a keen disappointment to him, for he had his heart set upon returning to New York in the same famous "bus" he left there in three weeks ago on the flight to Paris.

"With five million people waiting for you up there, you'd better not take chances on a forced landing or not getting there," they told him.

"Yes. Guess you're right," said "Lindy," and reluctantly agreed to the shift.

The substitute was trundled out, a shiny little Curtis C-1 type, painted black and yellow. The fuselage bore a picture of the dome of the capitol and the numerals "34" on each side. The under-surface of the wings bore "U. S. Army."

Lindbergh climbed in, and began to spin the motor. A small group of army flyers clung on to the sides of the cockpit, giving him suggestions as to the controls and the "moods" of the little racer. Lindbergh nodded quickly.

He shoved off in the teeth of a strong northeast wind, which had the flags about the field whipping stiffly in the early morning sunlight. The strength of the breeze may slow up his flying time to New York, although he was confident he would make it in two hours anyway. The distance is approximately 230 miles.

The field was muddy from last night's heavy rains, but it was accomplished without mishap either to "Lindy" or the escorting planes. The trim little Curtis taxied out, headed into the wind, and began to travel. Like a pert bird she started skimming head-on into the wind, gathering speed as the motor raced. The tail went up as she straightened to her work, and then he pulled the stick backward and ...ared aloft in a terrific burst of ...ed.

Two score planes accompanied ... into the air, the staccato roar... of their motors drowning out ... cheers of several thousand ...tchers, who despite elaborate ...itary and police precautions had ...hered at the field to see the get...y.

The first group of single-seaters ...eded "Lindy" into the air, and ... first observation group, com...ed of two-seaters, followed ...n.

Lindbergh bade goodbye to Washington with a flourish, and he gave experienced flyers at the field a final thrill by his daring take-off. As his landing wheels left the ground at the end of the run, he "pulled the stick into his stomach," as they say slangily in the air service and zoomed straight up into the sky. But the little Curtis motor was sturdy and she never faltered. He banked over, raced nto greater altitude, did a loop, and circled the field twice while the two-seaters were getting off the ground in groups of three.

"Wow," said a pair of army pilots who witnessed his breath-taking get away.

He circled the field until his escorting planes were all up and going. Then he turned the nose of the little racer northeast by the compass, and roared away. In five minutes he was but a speck in the sun-shot haze of the early morning, and in ten minutes he was out of sight.

Commander Richard E. Byrd, the North Pole flyer, took off from the field in an amphibian naval plane soon after "Lindy" soared away.

After the departure, it developed that several days work probably will be required before the "Spirit of St. Louis" is again ready to fly. The engineering officer of the field reported that a cam follower (CO) was cracked, swollen and stuck. While it will not be necessary to tear down the engine to make the repairs, one cylinder will have to be removed entirely, it was said.

WILL USE PLANE

CLEVELAND, O., June 13.—The Thompson Products Company Inc., has purchased an airplane to be used for "hurry-up" trips of officers of the concern and for "special deliveries." Other planes will be purchased later, according to E. G. Thompson, vice president.

YOUTH CRUSHED AS TRACTION CAR HITS AUTO AT CROSSING

Boy Loses Toe On Left Foot—Jump Fails To Save Him

Herbert Bowermaster, 14, Locust St., was injured so severely when a northbound Springfield and Xenia traction car his an auto near the municipal waterworks plant, north of Old Town on the Springfield Pike, about 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, that it was necessary for surgeons at McClellan Hospital to amputate the big toe on the left foot.

The youth, who is a cripple, attempted to leap from the car to safety but jumped in front of the approaching traction and was wedged between the auto and the front end of the traction car.

John Roberts, 35, also of Locust St., the driver, leaped to safety from the other side of the car, when it stalled on the crossing.

Bowermaster suffered injuries about the head consisting of cuts and bruises and both feet were bruised and lacerated. He was taken to McClellan Hospital by Frank Wagner, colored, Dunbar Ave., Dayton, where his injuries were treated by Dr. B. R. McClellan.

Bowermaster, with his father, Roy, two brothers and Roberts was fishing along the Little Miami River, and Roberts and young Bowermaster returned to Xenia to obtain a bucket in which to gather wild strawberries.

In returning to the river, the motor stalled as the machine was being driven across the car tracks in front of the northbound traction.

Peter Shagin, motorcycle policeman, investigated the accident.

WILE SAYS:

Hello Lindy Capital Pauses Suggests Fuller Tonsil Politics?

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1927

WASHINGTON, June 13. — There was more than the usual "mother touch" in the meeting at the White House between Evangeline Lindbergh and Grace Coolidge. Both women vaulted into the world's eye in the midst of lives that had strangely similar and humble origins. Perhaps the circumstance which the first lady of the land and Mrs. Lindbergh find most common to them is that by profession each is a school teacher. Today one is mistress of the White House; the other, the most envied mother on earth.

Comparatively little is known of the teaching career of either of them. Since fame overtook her, less than three weeks ago, it has leaked out that Mrs. Lindbergh, who teaches chemistry in a Detroit high school, is extraordinarily proficient in that science. Women in the Washington congressional set, who knew Mrs. Lindbergh when her husband was in the house, have been heard in recent hours calling her an American Madame Curie. Mrs. Coolidge, preceding her marriage in 1905, taught lip-reading in

SHOOTING CLAIMS ONE; ANOTHER HURT

NEWARK, O., June 13.—Fred Paul, 40, is dead, and his wife, Anna, is reported dying at a local hospital with a bullet through her brain, as the result of a shooting at the home of Mrs. Paul's father here Sunday afternoon. The husband, who had been estranged and separated from the woman for three weeks, called at her father's home and urged a reconciliation. When his wife refused to return to him, he suddenly produced a pistol and shot her, then shot himself, dying instantly. The couple are the parents of six children, ranging in age from 3 to 16 years.

LINDBERGH GETS MEMBERSHIP IN AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY

Flyer Declares Hawaii Flight Should Not Be Attempted Without Proper Navigation—Talks "Shop" Among Brother Flyers

WASHINGTON, June 13.— Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was entered today into the ranks of the immortals of aviation and science. It was the final honor conferred upon him before he left for New York to receive the acclaim of the great metropolis for his epochal flight to Paris.

The greatest figures in modern-day aviation attended a breakfast in the flyer's honor early this morning, and saw conferred upon him a life membership in the National Aeronautical Association, which has been conferred upon but nine other men in history; and the Hubbard medal by the National Geographic Society, which is reserved for the trail-blazers in history and science.

President Porter H. Adams of the National Aeronautic Association told "Lindy" that he well deserved to take his place beside the nine other holders of life membership in the organization. They are Wilbur, Orville and Miss Katherine Wright, Samuel Pierpont Langley, Octave Chanute, John J. Montgomery, Charles M. Manley, Glenn Hammond Curtiss and Thomas A. Edison.

The youth who seemed ill at ease in the pomp of an official celebration, was at home at the breakfast, where he could talk aviation with those who understood. He beamed his appreciation when Commander Richard Byrd, whom he beat in the race to Paris, personally presented the Hubbard medal.

Among the leaders in aviation present were chiefs of the army and navy air crops, Donald Hall, designer of "The Spirit of St. Louis,"; Capt. A. C. Read and Capt. H. C. Richardson, trans-oceanic fliers; Lieut. L. C. Maitland, world speed record holder; Glenn Martin, pioneer aircraft builder; Robert Nungesser, brother of the misisng French ace; Lieut. Russell Maughan, "dawn-to-dusk" flier; George K. Burgress, lighter-than air-craft designer and Dwight Morrow of J. P. Morgan and Company, whose committee recomended the "five-year air program."

In a characteristically brief speech after receiving the Hubbard medal from the hands of Lt. Com. Richard E. Byrd, Lindbergh spoke of the practicability of a California-to-Hawaii flight. Such a trip is feasible, he said, but he warned against attempting it by dead-reckoning the course, as he did on his New York-to-Paris trip.

"Aviation is on a sound business basis today," the young flyer told the distinguished audience of aviation specialists," and it must continue to be developed along these lines. Trans-Atlantic flying will come, but it will require sound gorund organization and extended research and direction by experienced men.

"There is a great interest at this time in a flight from California to Hawaii. This flight is entirely practicable, it can be done and it will be done. However, I hope no one tries to make it on the principle of navigation I used in my New York-to-Paris flight.

"If I had struck the coast of Ireland 300 miles north or south of where I did I still could have made Paris, but had I deviated any more I could not have made it because I would have been short of fuel. If an attempt is made to reach Hawaii by dead reckoning and the plane is a few degrees off the course and misses the coast there are several thousand miles of Pacific Ocean beyond, with small chance of a pilot's being picked up.

"I believe the flight should be made by radio navigation, or the pilot should carry a navigator."

His brother flyers at the breakfast gave their youthful compatriot, a hearty greeting. In presenting the Hubbard medal to Lindbergh, Lt. Com. Byrd referred indirectly to his own plans for a flight to Paris, which are now understood to be in abeyance.

"We were hoping to ge to Paris ourselves,' 'said the naval flyer, "but Col. Lindbergh got there first, and we are all glad he did."

PLANE SIGHTED

RIO JANEIRO, June 13.—Fishermen arriving here today reported sighting what they believed to be an areoplane off the Macara Island. The plane may have been that of Major Sarmento Beires, Portuguese trans-Atlantic flyer who has been missing a week. Tugs have been dispatched to Marca Island to investigate.

HONOR ACCORDED TO TRANS-OCEAN ACES WHEREVER THEY GO

Chamberlin And Levine Get Taste Of What Lindy Enjoyed

BADEN BADEN, Germany, June 13.—Although incognito, Clarence Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine are unable to escape adulation.

The two American flyers who ended their trans-ocean jump in Germany a week ago today, are here today for a rest with but little prospect of getting it.

Throughout their journey from Berlin their train was greeted by hundreds gathered at the stations and the conductor was forced to give them an extra compartment to hold the floral tributes hurled on the train.

At Karlsruhe the Association of Ex-Army Pilots presented Chamberlin and Levine with the insignia of their association and made them honorary members, thus, Chamberlin is the only former allied pilot to have the insignia of the German war pilots.

On arrival at Baden Baden the two flyers were taken by storm, 3,000 ardent admirers cheering them and the mayor and members of the city council extending an official welcome to them. The crowds carried the two fliers to their automobile upon their shoulders.

The Hotel Stefaine, where the two fliers registered, has suddenly become almost an American hostelry for in the past twenty-four hours more than 150 Americans have registered there.

Chamberlin today took account of cash on hand. He started for Europe with $11.60 and he has given away $1.60 as souvenir coins, but he still has $10, having found it impossible to spend a penny in Germany.

Chamberlin and Levine have decided to return to Berlin by commercial plane on Wednesday and will then fly to Bremen on Thursday to meet their wives.

Chamberlin received his first kiss from a German fraulein here. At the reception following his arrival an attractive girl, dressed in the quaint costume of the local peasant, forced her way to the side of the flyer, implanted a resounding smack and vanished. Chamberlin gestured helplessly in great embarrassment.

NINETEEN HURT AS BUS STRIKES CARS

PHILADELPHIA, June 13.—Nineteen persons were injured today when a Philadelphia-bound bus collided with a number of machines in trying to avoid a collision with a taxicab on the Delaware River bridge. The bus skidded and slid into a long line of about seventy-five cars, shaking up scores of persons. Six machines were damaged badly, one car bursting into flames.

John Bryan, bus driver, of this city, was arrested on a reckless driving charge.

WATROUS WINS FAME

OAKMOUNTAIN, Pa., June 13—Al Watrous, veteran of many golf tournaments, held the Indian sign today on the other 149 contenders for the national open crown. Al made a hole in one.

Watrous was playing with Walter Hagen against Johnny Farrell and Jimmy Johnston, when he sunk the pellet with his tee shot. It happened on the thirteenth hole which is surrounded by bunkers and traps.

Watrous took a mighty cut at the ball it came to earth six inches from the cup and rolled in. The thirteenth is a 164-yard hole.

EXPECT LENGEL WILL BE TRIED JULY 5; ARRAIGNED ON MONDAY

CANTON, O., June 13.—Former Chief of Police Saranus A. Lengel was to be arraigned here today, charged with first degree murder for alleged complicity in the slaying of Don R. Mellett, Canton publisher, last July.

Date of trial will probably be set for July 5, or shortly after that date.

Lengel was indicted, following submission of a statement to a special Stark County grand jury, by Floyd Streitenberger, ex-Canton detective, now serving a life term for his part in the crime.

Louis Mazer, Canton bootlegger, jointly indicted in the Mellett slaying, was to be taken to the penitentiary at Columbus either today or tomorrow. As reward for turning state's evidence, Mazer was allowed to plead guilty to manslaughter and sentenced to use his influence to effect Mazer's release at the end of five years, it was said.

GOTHAM ROARS HUGE WELCOME AS "LINDY" ARRIVES IN HARBOR

Guns Boom, Whistles Shriek And 16,000 Police F... To Keep Order As Flyer Returns To Metropolis As Air Hero

NEW YORK, June 13.—Aflame with color and bursti... with enthusiasm, New York today roared a tumultuous w... come to Charles A. Lindbergh, who three weeks and thr... days ago blazed a glorious trail through the air from Ne... York to Paris.

"Lindy!"

That was the affectionate greeting roared from millio... of throats. Again and again, in thunderous volume, t... huge throngs stretching from the Battery to Central Par... shouted that one word in a hysterical frenzy.

Guns boomed, harbor vessels shrieked, factory whistl... blew, automobile horns honked and people went wild with a... miration as Colonel Lindbergh made his triumphal entry in... the city.

Nothing comparable to it has been witnessed in Ne... York since the return of the famous Twenty-seventh divisi... from the World War.

Even Admiral George Dewey's reception upon his return from Manila Bay in 1899 was surpassed and certainly the welcome was as great as that accorded General John J. Pershing when he returned victoriously from the World War.

Bedlam broke loose when "Lindy" in an army amphibian plane, descended gracefully in the gleaming waters of the harbor.

The big guns from Governors Island and Fort Wadsworth boomed their greeting; whistles and sirens on the hundreds of craft of all sorts, from majestic ocean liners to tiny tugs, that choked the harbor, were unloosed and from the green slopes of the shore, thousands of people let forth a mighty roar—"Lindy."

"Lindy" smiled shyly. He had expected a reception, but nothing quite like this. He waved to crowds lining the decks of the flag bedecked vessels. He was soon transferred from the cockpit of the city's official boat, the Macom, which was brightly dressed in flags from stem to stern.

Bands aboard the boats played stirring tunes as the Macom with the famous guest on deck, steamed up the harbor through a lane of several hundred vessels to pier A, at the battery.

Airplanes droned overhead in the bright sunlight, sweet music to "Lindy's" ears. He looked upward frequently, as the flyers executed fancy formations.

Fifty thousand people were massed around Battery Park when the Macom landed "Lindy" at the Battery. A hundred brightly groomed police horses, bearing mounted officers, pranced excitedly while their riders strove to control the straining crowds.

More than 1,000 policemen formed a solid cordon in the two blocks between pier A and the elevated station. Secrecy shrouded the place at which Lindbergh was to land in his own famous plane because officials feared the possibility of disastrous consequences from the unprecedented crowds that await him at every point of vantage.

Long before the hour which Lindbergh was scheduled to arrive, the slopes along the sea wall, the streets of lower Broadway, City Hall Park, Madison Square, Fifth avenue, and the thoroughfares feeding into them, were black with humanity. East side, west side, all around the town, the sidewalks of New York were jammed as never before in their history. Battery Park, where "Lindy" will first step ashore, was bulging with thousands of people fired with the ambition to be among the first to roar their welcome to the returning hero, idol of the nation and of the world.

From the battery Lindbergh, preceded by an escort of 10,000 troops, will move on through teeming masses of humanity to City Hall, where he will be presented with the medal of valor by Mayor Walker. Chicago Cooks, Rides, Sees, Thanks to Mr. Samuel Insull

By L. E. EARLY,
International Illustrated News Staff Correspondent.

CHICAGO (I-I-N)—Chicago cooks breakfast on Insull gas, rides to work on Insull cars, listens to Insull grand opera, reads by Insull electric lights and, say some, votes for candidates picked by Mr. Samuel Insull.

One of the most spectacular figures in American history has been brought to the fore again by a series of movements that ended with him in control of Chicago's street cars, bus lines and elevated railroads. For twenty years Chicago has talked about consolidation of traction. Figure after figure in politics and finance has attempted it. Recently the Aldermen spent $1,600,000 in trying to devise a plan, and just about the time that they had given up it was announced that Insull had made his own plan and put it into execution.

Insull came to America in 1880 as secretary to Thomas A. Edison. He was born in England, and had started out as an office boy, studying stenography in his spare time. He made the acquaintance of Edison's London manager, and he recommended that Edison send for the twenty-one-year-old youngster. Edison did.

Insull is a natural manager. He did everything for Edison, handling bond transactions and buying his neckties. He soon found himself organizing Edison's businesses, and in 892 was made second vice-president of the General Electric Company.

A few months later he resigned to take over the presidency of a Chicago electric company. With this as a toehold he climbed rapidly up the heights he holds today. He extended his electric interests all over the middle West, he entered the gas business, taking over a Chicago company on the verge of bankruptcy and making it pay, he took over struggling electric lines and made them pay, and half a dozen other public utilities came under his control.

The Chicago Opera Company was losing money, and Insull was asked to save it. He Insullized it, and now it's one of the best financed companies in America.

As a contributor to political campaigns, Insull is one of nature's noblemen. Senatorial investigations have revealed that he's been very generous, contributing, in some instances to both sides of a single fight.

The public utility problem has always been linked with politics, and some see a connection between Insull's interest in politics and his latest coup. Whether there is or not, it's certain that Insull is now probably the most powerful man in the city today, and that he's unified the traction lines of Chicago, which Chicago has wanted for years.

COMPLETE SELL OUT OF ALUMNI BANQUET TICKETS FORESEEN

Figuratively speaking, "standing room only" will be available for the annual banquet of the Central High School Alumni Association Wednesday night at 6:15 at the school building, as indications point to complete "sell-out" of tickets for the affair.

A few tickets remain but these are being disposed of in short order and reservations should be made as quickly as possible to insure accommodations.

A short speaking program has been arranged in connection with the banquet, interspersed by group singing, after which the annual election of officers will be the closing feature.

Following the banquet, motion pictures will be shown in the auditorium by R. Hayes Hamilton, this city, travelogue lecturer. As an additional attraction, dancing will be enjoyed in the gymnasium with music supplied by a nine-piece supper club orchestra, that is making its appearance in Xenia for the first time.

RICH or POOR?

Young or old, all suffer from intestinal stasis (constipation). The cause can be told with one word—

That word is "Civilization"! It means "over-eating", "over-work", "worry" and "nerve enervation", wrong foods, wrong drinks! Not enough animal exercise, such as running, jumping, walking, climbing, etc.

The nervous force that should go to the bowel-nerves is taken by the brain or other parts of the body, to perform "civilized duties—or excesses."

Avoid all the causes you can! You can't avoid all of them, therefore you may need the aid of Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills, to nourish and tone-up the bowel-nerves; to stimulate the liver; to cleanse and purify the 32 feet of intestines where delayed activity has made poisons which cause biliousness, sick headache, irritable, grouchy feelings, and impaired efficiency in work or play.

Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills are non-secret, prompt, and pleasant. Sold by druggists for 25 years and "Better Than Castor Oil." 45 pills—30 cts.

HORSE SENSE!

TOLEDO, O.—Are horses, in a last effort to compete with the ubiquitous automobile, learning to interpret the signal lights, without aid from the drivers? So says the owner of a delivery wagon who left his horse standing outside the Nasby building. When he was inside the building, the light at Madison avenue and Huron St. (which had been set against Huron St.) changed and the stream of traffic moved. The unattended horse took one look at the light, saw the "Go" signal and started off at a canter. He made the turn on Madison avenue, taking no notice whatever of the shouts of pedestrians, who noticed the driverless vehicle. Reaching Madison avenue and Superior St., the signal was against him and he duly stopped. What might have happened after this will never be known, as the driver arrived and took charge.

SHE WENT FROM BAD TO WORSE

Down to 98 Pounds—Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cleveland, Ohio.—"After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so I tried it. After taking four bottles, I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble."—Mrs. M. Riessinger, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear, and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose? Wealth? Happiness?

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

ST. BRIGID SENIORS URGED TO SERVICE BY SPEAKER SUNDAY

"You will not do much for yourself unless you do a great deal for your fellow man," the Rev. James Ward, St. Joseph Church, Dayton, told seven graduates of St. Brigid High School at commencement exercises held in connection with a solemn high mass at St. Brigid Church Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

The church was filled for the services which included the mass with the Rev. David Powers, pastor, as celebrant, the Rev. Father Ward as deacon and the Rev. Father Elbert, Dayton, sub-deacon, a processional of the graduates and other high school pupils and closed with benediction with the Blessed Sacrament.

Graduates and high school pupils sang the processional to organ accompaniment as they entered the church and the seniors were placed at individual kneeling benches in front of the sanctuary. Each senior was accompanied by a sponsor. The girl graduates were attired in white costumes of uniform design and their sponsors wore green frocks.

The Rev. Father Ward, beginning his address to the graduates, told them that commencement exercises at the mass was a fitting way to close the years of school work. Catholic education, he said, following the teachings of the Catholic church, teaches its children how to live and prepares them for death.

"Its education prepares the pupil mentally, morally and physically," he said. "Education without religion is not worthy of the name. While the Catholic church likes to see its children attain high places in the business wrold, is not averse to seeing them occupy prominent positions in the professions, yet the church has not so much regard for the temporal reward of her children as it has for their final destiny."

Closing he urged the graduates to "have a pure heart and clean intentions. You have been called to labor in the vineyard. Remember there is no one truly happy but those loving and serving the Master."

The seven graduates who received their diplomas were the Misses Helen Donovan, Elizabeth Killeen, Agnes Osborn and Pauline Scully and Leo Cain, James Keible and John Geiger.

The choir sang the mass with special solo parts by Miss Eleanor McDonnell and Miss Ruth Galliger.

VALUE OF IDEALS TOLD SENIO... AT WILBERFORCE EXERC...

"The Imperative Need of Imperial Ideals" was the subject discussed by Bishop W. A. Fountain, A. M., D. D., Atlanta, Ga., who delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the Wilberforce University graduating class, Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, in Jones Auditorium, Shorter Hall, where six hundred people gathered to attend the opening exercises of the sixty-fourth annual commencement of the oldest and largest colored educational institution of the country.

The general faculty, members of the graduating classes of the several departments of the school, and graduates of former commencements, met in the auditorium of Galloway Hall, and with President Gilbert H. Jones and Bishop W. H. Fountain at the head of the line, marched to Jones Auditorium.

Prof. Wm. A. Sykes, director of the musical department, was in charge of the musical program. Miss Grace Edwards, an assistant of the department, played the organ prelude, and the University Choral sang the opening hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy." Rev. R. B. Smith, presiding elder of the New Jersey Conference, offered the invocation and Dr. J. C. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn., read as the scripture lesson, Job 28:12-28. Miss Lucile Dean and Robert P. Ecton were the leading soloists. President Gilbert H. Jones introduced the speaker for the occasion, who opened his remarks by saying that Rome was the center of financial and governmental strength of the world.

"Here lived the world's greatest orators, Caesar, Cicero, and Hortenshius. Here lived the world's greatest poets, Virgil, Horace and Ovid. Here lived the world's greatest generals, Pompey, Caesar and Titus—all proudly boasted that they were Roman citizens. The man or people who found not their ideals somewhere in the confines of this imperial city was not worthy of his existence, according to the so-called best thought of the times.

"If an idea is a mental image, form, or a representation of anything," said the speaker, "then an idea is something existing in an idea or intellect, hence an ideal is the ego of a idea. Ideals are mental visions, pictures flung upon the sensitive plate of the mind as real as any ever thrown upon the canvass by a stereoptician, and out of ideals the characters of people or individuals are made.

"Men may sneer and say they are impossible, too high for every day use, but without them character is an impossible thing. The hope of my race, or any other race, is securely in Christian education and high ideals. The rising generation must be taught to admire the highest and purest in human conduct. Christian education, through imperial ideals will lead to 'golden conduct' by means of an unerring instinct. America has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectations of her most ardent admirers, because of her imperial ideals embodied in her constitution, but she has flagrantly disregarded those high ideals until her citizens cannot truthfully sing, 'That this is the land of the free, and the home of the brave.

"The business ideal of a race, should be pure and substantial. Some who leave these walls today perhaps will not be privileged to matriculate elsewhere; but in the busy, active world you must take your stand, and if you will observe the Golden Rule, 'Do unto others as you would have them to do unto you,' success awaits in the battle of life."

CHAMBERLIN'S FLIGHT

When Clarence Chamberlin landed safely in Germany with the Bellanca monoplane Columbia after a uccessful non-stop flight from Long Island over a record istance his achievement immediately took on great importance in its relation to the comity of nations as well as he progress of aviation. But in lauding this truly Yankee lier for his epochal achievement of not only crossing the cean but penetrating so far into Europe as a village not ar from Berlin one need not feel that the exploit in any ay belittles that for which Washington and New York re in the throes of preparation to welcome home harley Lindbergh, whose mastery of the Atlantic aerial rossing from New York to Paris always will remain distinctive as that of a "lone eagle" who dared and accomlished what previously had been generally considered n impossibility or something approaching the mirculous.

For Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine, the inexperinced navigator who had the hardihood to go along in hat capacity, Germany is giving a welcome which eminntly is their due. When Chamberlin grimly set Berlin nd not Paris as his destination he showed the stuff he made of. His arrival there proves him to be entitled to niche in fame as one of the great airmen of all times.

The achievements of Lindbergh and Chamberlin robably are the forerunners of flights which will make rossing the Atlantic or the New York to Berlin journey y air attract little more attention than do present day rossings of the Atlantic by steamships.

But it took a Lindbergh and a Chamberlin to dis- of some of the bugaboos which have been retarding development of aviation and their success, although oubtedly aided by mechanical developments in recent to promote the safety of piloting planes, is largely bute to their efficiency and courage as flying men.

BUSY LEGIONNAIRE

The busiest man in the United States isn't President lge. That distinction today probably is held by . Wicker, Jr., national travel director of the Ameregion France convention committee. The job of 30,000 Legionnaires ready for the "second A. E. hich is to invade Paris in September, is almost as ough a proposition as the war department had, when it as preparing to ship a couple of million doughboys ver there." Wicker has put in about three years on the egion's forth-coming pilgrimage. Hitherto the largest ace-time migration of Americans to Europe was the r association's trip in 1924. The Legion caravan will be times the size of the lawyers' lark. General Frank T. nes, now director of the veterans' bureau, supervised e ocean movements of American troops during the orld War, and has given Wicker the benefit of the my's experience in 1917 and 1918. Wicker is a Virgin, a lawyer, and had overseas experience in the air rvice.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON

by FRED C. KELLY

WHEN MONEY IS AN OBSTACLE

A great manufacturing concern with selling branches all over the United States, has been dissatisfied all this year with the reports from two large cities in New York state.

Sales have not been large in proportion to the number of salesmen employed and considering the size of the two cities.

Last week the high - salaried president of the company became personally curious about the situation in those two places and sent a keen-minded investigator to get the facts.

The answer was at first a little hard to discover. All the salesmen were exceptionally intelligent young men, each with a personality that should have been able to charm birds out of the trees. Yet they didn't close enough sales.

Finally the investigator stumbled upon an explanation. These young men were mostly well born. That is, they came mainly from established families characterized by intelligence and success. Their parents and grandparents had been successful enough in business or professions to accumulate comfortable fortunes.

Surely, one would think, it is from successful parents that successful salesmen should spring and that probably was the theory which had led the local sales manager to select the men he did.

But belonging to financial successful families proved to be the seat of the trouble with these young salesmen. They had inherited small legacies from their ancestors. Not only that, but such inherited funds had been carefully left in charge of competent trust companies—which isn't surprising, for men capable of making and saving money would naturally want to safeguard it in their wills. The young men didn't even have a chance to lose their money and take a fresh start.

Nearly every one of the salesmen investigated in two different branch agencies had an independent income from trusteed funds amounting to from $100 to $200 a month.

It is interesting to note that no one had more than $250 a month. The average was probably less than $150. These salesmen could hardly be called wealthy. They could not live in the style to which they were accustomed without working. But nevertheless, they had less concern about holding their jobs and making good than if they had been without other sources of income.

In other words, these well bred young salesmen were handicapped by lack of incentive.

Their money was a costly luxury. It is quite conceivable that they might have more money ten years from now, and have more fun getting it, if they had inherited none.

If you were a sales manager, would you care to have your selling force made up of young men having independent incomes, always sure of a living without working?

The Theatre

By FLEET SMITH

The current season in Hollywood has been good to the Cinderellas. At least three little "extra girls" have become stars this spring. Each of them went to Hollywood with no intention of going into pictures—oh no—and in just a short time had joined the throng of "extras." The latest star discovered lived at Chester, Ill., proving that there is no geographical handicap in getting into the pictures. Her name is Nora Lane and she went to Hollywood to visit a friend.

After an appearance as an extra she was signed to star as Fred Thomson's leading lady and will no doubt be seen in "The Life of Jesse James" which Thomson is to make for Paramount. Fay Wray and Sue Carol have had parallel experiences. The former, a Hollywood high school student was discovered by Erich Von Stroheim and after playing the lead in "The Wedding March" will appear opposite Emil Jannings in "Hitting For Heaven." Sue Carol is a Chicago girl and had never seen a studio until she went to Hollywood on a visit. She has just been selected to play the lead in Douglas MacLean's "Soft Cushions."

The exquisite Esther Ralston and her husband, George Webb, are in New York for the expressed purpose of closing their "honeymoon apartment," which they rented soon after their marriage, but never lived in, owing to the star's call to Hollywood. Miss Ralston rushed to New York upon the completion of "The Modern Commandaments" in which she is being starred by Paramount. On her way she stopped off at her gold mine in Arizona to pan a little gold. One should always tarry a moment at a gold mine before starting on a Fifth Ave. shopping tour.

While discussing the thrills of panning nuggets and pay dirt, Miss Ralston was asked by the writer what she thought of gold diggers in general and the possibility of her being cast as "Lorelei" in the film version of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

"There is such a vast difference between digging gold in Arizona and gold digging on Broadway that I do not feel qualified to discuss the latter occupation," she said. Miss Ralston said that although she had frequently been mentioned for the part by "her public," she did ont crave the role as she did not believe she could properly portray the typical American gold-digging blonde.

Pola Negri and her husband, Prince Serge Mdivani, recently married in France, have returned to America. The Princess announced to reporters in New York that she would continue to be Miss Negri to her friends and in fact, to everybody. She wants it known that she did not marry a title and that she is supremely in love. The Prince does not want to be known as Mr. Pola Negri, neither does he want to retain his title. He is very much American and a splendid fellow. Following his impoverishment resulting from the Russian revolution, he came to America and with his brother entered college, where they were very popular. His brother married Mae Murray. On her return to Hollywood Miss Negri will resume her work in pictures for Paramount. Her next, "Barbed Wire," is said to reveal her at her best. This picture was directed by Rowland V. Lee.

suppose someone will say: at does sneezing amount to?" reply would be: "A great "

is a very important proceedit may mean in spreading of disease and its subsequent development in hundreds of cases, and may even lead to the sacrifice of many lives.

If that is so, it is neither insignificent nor unimportant. When the ends of certain nerve fibers in the nose and throat are irritated or stimulat- the immediate response is a ze. This irritation may be uced in a variety of ways, by aught of air, by tickling with ather, a pinch of snuff, dust lmost any kind, the pollen of ain plants, and any of these, irritants of many other varie- reaching certain portions of mucous membrane of the , will at once excite a more or violent attack of sneezing. he same thing takes place n certain portions of the oat are irritated by food or k that is too hot or too cold, any svbstance that is rough irritating or even by certain tions.

neezing is not confined to any or period of life, but of course mucous membrane of some ple is much more sensitive that of others. This explains some have colds or hay fever nasal catarrh all the time, le others are comparatively or rely free from it.

is perfectly evident that the ency to attacks of sneezing is erited with a great many indiuals, for they manifest it with nost the first breath they draw er coming into the world. What ppens in sneezing? Usually a e or less prolonged inhalation, ning of the mouth, elevation of tongue and pressure upon the h or palate, and then an exive exhalation which may be eated any number of times, acding to the intensity of the impression and the sensitiveness of the mucous membrane. With some, the sneezing is unattended by any discharge, but with the majority of people there is an emission of fluid or vapor from the mouth, frequently from the nose, and very often from the eyes.

Now the mouth and nose constantly contain a great variety of bacteria and it often happens that some of these bacteria are of a virulent character.

The person carrying them may be immune to them at the time or perhaps permanently.

But suppose such a person sneezes in the presence of somebody who is susceptible and liberates a swarm of these germs which are at once taken up by the one who is susceptible. This is not theory nor imagination, for it has happened repeatedly. Therefore, the point which I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can, is that whenever there is an inclination to sneeze, the mouth and nos should immediately be covered with a handkerchief or something which is equally effective and protective.

It is not polite nor decorous, and is certainly ill-mannered to spray a person with the moisture of sneezing, but worse than that is the possibility of liberating germs which may be the means of doing harm to others.

SIGNIFICANT SAYINGS OF THE DAY

"Legislation, not only in New Jersey, but in all of the other states, and in the nation itself, has reached a condition which is startling, if not alarming. It is against this volume of laws that I am making a plea that in the future we have fewer and better laws. It will be found many times that the remedy to social evils can be obtained with no new legislation whatever, and may be cured by applying some of the fundamental rules of common law, which we now possess."—William T. Read, president New Jersey State Bar association.

"Cancer is not a plague before which we must hopelessly succumb, for early treatments will cure it. What starts cancer, we do not know, but we do know that at first it is purely local, and easily removable. It is a local lesion. Take away the disease spot and the patient is cured. There are thousands of people, leading ordinary, normal lives, who have been cured."—Dr. Arthur H. Evans, cancer specialist, Westminster Hospital.

We shall also take up the question of the high cable tolls that keep down the volumes of news from the Orient."—Dr. Henry Suzallo, former president University of Washington.

Little Old New York

NEW YORK June 13.—At a club the other night a writer was complaining that his financial worries were so great that he could not get his mind on his work, and so his financial condition was getting steadily worse.

"Nonsense," said a successful publisher. "Don't you know that all of the finest poetry and the best literature are produced by poets and novelists living on crumbs in garrets?"

"I know nothing of the kind," answered the writer. "If what you say were true, the present state of American literature should be more flourishing in undying masterpieces; for you publishers are disposed to ration us with crumbs."

At the corner of Fifth avenue and Fifty-ninth street yesterday I saw a maroon colored limousine of foreign make, the tonneau of which had no side windows and only two small, oval windows, one in the front and one in the back. The chauffeuer, of course, sat in a seat in front; but the owner of the car was entirely shut off from the stares of the vulgar.

This limousine looked somewhat like an expensive and luxurious armoured car, and it attracted a swarm of people as it waited at the curb. I stood for some time, hoping to see the owner come out of a shop and get into it. I did this because I wanted to make up my mind as to one of the two possible reasons that, it occurred to me, any one should have a car especially designed like that. One of the reasons might be that the owner is a snob who does not wish to look upon the common mob or have the common mob look at her or him. The other reason might be that the owner was physically so afflicted that he or she did not wish to be gazed upon. I never found out which was the true reason.

The importance of timeliness in reading matter and the importance of not being ahead of the public taste is strikingly exemplified in the great sale of "The New Medical Follies," by Dr. Morris Fishbein. This book is a best seller among the non fiction books.

The first chapter, which runs to nearly three-quarters of the book, is an encyclopedia of the fake cures, quackeries and psycho-therapies of the medical world. Eleven years ago H. L. Mencken published almost precisely the same list, and a much more extensive one than Dr. Fishbein's, as a supplement to "A Book of Burlesques." Mencken called it "A Genealogical Chart of the Uplift."

Mencken got $100 in advance royalties on the "'Book of Burlesques," out of which he had to pay a stenographer for typing the book $40. About a year's work netted him, then, about $60. During the intervening eleven years, however, his books have become very profitable sellers. And it is a satisfaction to note that first editions of "A Book of Burlesques" are so rare and so much in demand that they bring almost as much per copy as was Mencken's profit out of the book the first year it was issued.

The number of men (?) with make-up on their faces seems to be increasing in the neighborhood of Times Square, and is making that district more and more distasteful to normal people. These mincing creatures have their eyebrows plucked, their eyelids blacked with mascara, their cheeks and lips rouged. It is bad enough to see how much the women on Broadway are over-painted and overmade up. Some of the younger women look like circus clowns, with their faces powdered dead white, their eyebrows made artificially long with a black pencil, and their lips painted very thick. But these painted sissy boys make one want to rush for the fire-axe.

A new development in the night life of Broadway is the terror that has been struck into the hearts of some of the newspaper men who make their living by writing about the theaters, the night clubs and the life of Broadway. Two or three newspaper men who have pictured the life of the night clubs as not quite as decorous as a Sunday school picnic have been waylaid and beaten up by thugs presumably in the employ of night club operators or in the employ of gunmen who are among the big spenders at the night clubs.

There was a time when two or three small publications battened upon blackmailing anyone connected with Broadway who was thought to be drawing down a decent salary or making a fair living. Scandal was cooked up about them or inneuendoes prepared in proof form for insertion in the magazines. The editor of the publication would then send the proof around to the victim and tell him or her that unless the victim kicked in with a full page advertisement, the libellous paragraph would be printed.

The libel laws were evaded by subterfuges like that of asking a question of a scandalous nature, and not giving the answer. To frame the same insinuation as a statement would be libellous under the law, but a question would not be. Libel suits were brought, but the editor would always show himself insolvent, and the victim could not recover even in the event of winning the suit. Reputations were blasted, disgraceful insinuations were made without any apparent foundation. It is true that one such editor was caught in attempted blackmail and that he spent a term in Atlanta prison; but the graft seemed to have died out.

Now there exists the other extreme. A commentator on Broadway night life may not publish legitimate news without incurring the possibility of being beaten up by hired thugs.

SUMMER HAIR PROBLEM

I have told you before that the texture of the scalp follows, to a considerable degree, the texture of the skin; that is, it is either normal, dry or oily, and summer, with its outdoor life and scorching sun brings hair problems to all but to some in greater degrees than others.

If you possess an oily scalp you will not have as great a problem as the woman with a dry scalp, as the heat of the summer drys, to a considerable degree, the natural oils and you will do well to remember that the damage of the hot weather and drying winds will be considerable unless you counteract it with minute care.

So during the summer season, with its joy and freedom of outdoor life in such great abundance, you must redouble your energies in hair attention.

Be diligent with your brushing, use good stiff brushes and plenty of vim and vigor behind them. Whether the hair is long or short, brush it long and brush it often.

Because I have spoken of the drying effects of summer sun and winds do not misunderstand me and think I do not approve of sunlight and air for the hair, because I most heartily do, and they are among the greatest tonics. I am simply warning you against the excesses that are always criminal—such as going for any length of time without a hat while sitting, standing or walking in the broiling sun. The right knid of summer air is as good for the hair as too much scorching sun is bad.

Pale blonde hair, especially, should not be exposed to the direct rays of the summer sun, or it will be inclined to take on a lifeless hue.

However, sunning and airing the hair in the right way is most beneficial. For instance, it will do your hair lots of good, no matter what type of scalp you possess, if you stand or sit in the open window on a summer morning when the sun is streaming in and let the life-giving rays of the sun pour their energy and vitality into your hair and the air sweep through it. If your hair is long you should loosen it and let it fall down over your shoulders and back so that the sun and air can penetrate and if your hair is bobbed, you should shake and ruffle your short locks. The hair will respond to this sun and air treatment as a wilting flower to a summer rain.

Police Raid Reserves' Winning Streak; Divide Two

Result Leaves Loop Leadership Still Unsettled Between Dayton Police And Xenia—Locals May Withdraw

RESERVES' WINNING streak of seven in a row was smashed by the Dayton Police Sunday afternoon at Washington Park, the minions of the law winning the first game of a double-header 8 to 4 while the Reserves earned an even break by winning the aftermath 7 to 4 in seven innings.

By dividing the twin bill, the two clubs continue in a tie for leadership of the Buckeye League with indications the deadlock will not be broken until such a time as a third meeting is scheduled later in the season.

Up until the Sunday bargain attraction, neither club had lost a game this season.

Misplays afield cost the Reserves the opening contest. Payton, who lost his first game of the year, and the veteran Lape, staged a pretty hurler's battle for seven innings but with victory in their grasp, the locals went to pieces in the field in the eighth inning, the coppers scoring five runs on three hits, five errors and a mixture of dumb and indifferent baseball.

Keifer led the Reserve batting, punching out a single and home run. The circuit smash came with one on base in the third inning. Tangeman and Scott also cracked out two hits. Gaylor led the Police with a double, single and walk.

Hits of the long distance variety won the closing game for the Reserves, together with the brilliant support accorded Cyphers in the field. The final affair was a revelation, for whereas the local nine fielded raggedly in the opener, exactly the contrary was the case in the nightcap and Cyphers was saved time and again by marvelous support.

Tangeman pounded out a home run and triple, the Reserve shortstop a triple and double and Keifer a long triple. Reserves were outhit in both games, 8 to 6 in the opener and 9 to 8 in the second contest.

The management of the local club will attend a conference of league officials Monday night and it will be decided at this time whether the Reserves will remain in the circuit or withdraw.

STRANGER WAS JOHN, HIMSELF

NIAGARA FALLS—Well, folks, John Daley is back home again, sure enough. You know, John just clean disappeared from this town a coupla months ago, and nobody ever did know what had become of him. Just vanished, hide and hair. There was a body picked up in a cinder pit over to the roundhouse that some folks said was John, but there never was anything sure about it, and it did seem like John's disappearance was one of them unsolved mysteries. Well, now, John's back, and the funny thing is that he's in jail. It seems like his folks went into the house the other evening, and here was a man asleep in the best bed, where no man had any call to be by right. So the folks just telephoned the police station, and the cops run around to the house, and here this stranger was John, himself. Well, it seems like John was sort of full of likker, and the cops had made the trip anyway, and not wanting to make a trip like that for nothing they pinched John for luck and because he was kind of lit up. Don't that beat all get out?

BAYLIFFS DIVIDE DOUBLE HEADER IN TRIANGLE CONTEST

Bowersville Bayliffs broke even in a double-header with Wilmington on the latter's diamond Sunday afternoon in the Triangle League, losing the first 1 to 0 and copping the final 13 to 1.

Both contests were originally limited to seven innings, but the first game was forced into an extra inning.

The Bayliffs were held to one hit by D. Shadley in the first game, a safety by N. Murrell. Helky was almost as good, yielding four hits, three of which were bunched for the winning tally in the eighth round.

The second game was an easy victory. Helky bettered his previous game by allowing only two hits and one run, while Shadley failed to repeat his wonderful performance of the opening game and was soon batted out of the box.

Wilmington used five hurlers in the nightcap, all of whom were ineffective.

Bowersville will play the league-leading Spring Valley nine next Sunday, June 19 at 3 p. m. The game will be played at Wilmington. This will be the first meeting with the leaders this season.

In another Triangle League game Sunday, Spring Valley retained its position by defeating Jamestown 9 to 8 in ten innings.

AUTO CAMPAIGN IS COSTLY TO PASTOR

OTTAWA, O., June 13.— The automobile industry chalked up another victory here today when the Rev. Frank M. Karns resigned pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church departed for Toledo to engage in private pursuits.

The Rev. Karns disagreed with his congregation, and is reported to have opposed automobile riding especially when it was not necessary for church purposes. His parishioners said he termed it an instrument of the devil in the hands of ordinary persons.

The church will dispense with the services of a pastor until after the West Ohio Methodist Conference next fall.

CRACKERS ARE GREAT; MAKE BOW LEGS STRAIGHT

CHICAGO.—H. E. Van Norman is a man exceeding smart and wise; he knows his p's, he knows his q's, he also knows his i's. As long as fashion's foibles dictate skirts so very brief, the girls whose legs are not so straight are filled with woe and grief; for a girl's legs may be crooked, and if fashions are concealing it matters not at all, but now, when dresses are revealing each maiden's limbs to all the world, Dame Fashion's hardest blows are showered on the flapper who must show her beau her bows. Now comes H. E. Van Norman with advice that's smart and sage: "Eat more good food," he tells the girls, "and then you'll be the rage. More calories and vitamines will make your bowlegs straight; lunch every day on crackers, and you'll be feeling great." Thus comes true science once again to dry up human tears, and for H. E. Van Norman all the bowlegged girls shout "Cheers!"

THESE ARE THE ANSWERS TO THE QUESTIONS ON PAGE FOUR

1. President Poincare of France has announced that he hoped to get better debt settlement terms from the United States.

2. Clarence Chamberlin and Charles Levine have formulated a plan to invest $2,000,000 in establishing a transatlantic commercial airplane line.

3. Richmond, Va., reports an earthquake shock which rocked houses, but caused no serious damage, at 2:17 a. m. June 10.

4. On June 10 Commander Francesco de Pinedo, Italian intercontinental flyer, started from the Azores on his flight back to Italy.

5. Ray and Roy de Autremont, twin brothers, were arrested in Steubenville, O., for a train robbery in Oregon after a four-year search.

a school for the deaf at Northampton, Mass. The wife of the president and the mother of the hero found a wealth of mutual interest during their historic hours together in Washington.

It happens that one of the most novel of a myriad of suggestions for enduringly honoring Lindbergh comes from Mrs. Coolidge's own town. The Vermont State Chamber of Commerce, at Burlington, proposes that some American composer worthy of the task proceed to write a Lindbergh "flight symphony." The chamber says: "Well has it been observed that words fail to express what needs to be expressed in connection with Lindbergh's achievement. Nothing could be more musical than that indescribable flight, the perfect personality of the flier, and the great recognition of a great event by the people of France. What movements there could be in such a symphony after the perilous taking-off flight over land and sea, by a lone aviator, with a whole world thinking about him—flight by day and by night, and finally a burst of light and an ovation by a whole people."

Political Washington paused in the midst of its Lindbergh complex to gasp over the little "run-in" between President Coolidge and Senator Smoot on the question of a special session of congress. The G. O. P. high priest from Utah emerged from the executive sanctum and authorized the statement that the president would convene congress in October. No sooner had that word been winged to the country than Mr. Coolidge issued a devastating denial. It was accompanied by the stern assertion that when there was anything to announce about a special session, the president would be his own broadcaster. Nobody imagines that the White House meant to rebuke the all-powerful chairman of the senate finance committee. But it isn't the first time that Mr. Coolidge has taken occasion publicly to resent the periodic practice of callers to tell the world what they gleaned at his desk before he was ready to have it known.

North Carolina Republicans, who are probably the most numerous of their breed anywhere in Dixie are to the front with the very newest thing under the 1928 sun. One of their spokesmen, rhapsodizing over the action of Governor Fuller, of Massachusetts, in appointing a committee to investigate the Sacco-Vanzetti case, deposes and says that it's big enough to earn Fuller national recognition. He therefore proposes that Republican history could well afford to repeat itself next year, whereby the presidential ticket would be headed by an Ohioan and tail-ended by a son of the Bay State—as it was in 1920. To that end he suggests Nicholas Longworth for president, and Alvan T. Fuller for vice president.

Ever since it became known that Senator Borah, Demosthenes of congress, has been reduced to a whisper by an operation for tonsilitis, Washington wags have hastened to say that everything Vice President Dawes wants to accomplish could be accomplished by removing tonsils on both sides of the senate aisle. Newspapers all over the country are now printing an advertisement bearing the photograph and autograph of Senator Curtis, of Kansas, administration leader in the senate. The advertisement recommends a certain brand of cigarets, and Curtis suggestively observes that nearly all senators smoke cigarets and find, to their joy, that the habit does not affect their voices.

Senor Honorio Pueyrredon, the ambassador of Argentina at Washington, is in the midst of an extensive tour of study in the agricultural areas of the middle west. He decided to spend his vacation that way instead of indulging, as most of his ambassadorial confreres at this season do, in the luxury of holidays on some fashionable seashore. Senor Pueyrredon will travel from coast to coast by automobile. His family is in the party and the caravan consists of two cars. The ambassador will inspect wheat farms, cattle ranches, sugar-beet plantations, fruit orchards and department of agriculture experimental stations. He's particularly interested in Uncle Sam's fight on the corn-borer and on hog cholera. Among several members of congress who paved the way for the Argentinian diplomat's expedition is Senator Kendrick, of Wyoming, who is one of the country's great stock growers.

Ambassador Houghton is tarrying in Washington on leave from the Court of St. James' at London. Our envoy to Great Britain is found by capital correspondents conspicuously less communicative than he was in the spring of 1926, when Mr. Houghton's observations on the European situation created a near-crisis "over there" and a storm in the United States senate. Private affairs largely, the ambassador asserts, brings him home at this time. The forty-first reunion of his Harvard class is one of the Houghton missions on native heath. The ambassador is loud in praise of Lindbergh's bearing in England. "He's a boy of whom we can all be very proud," Mr. Houghton avers, "for he has received honors unprecedented and kept his head."

"The Making of a Law," is the title of an informative address to be delivered next week by Mrs. Martha R. Gold, secretary to United States Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, in Kansas City. Her forum will be the national convention of the Kappa Beta Pi legal sorority. Mrs. Gold, in her non-secretarial incarnation, is a lawyer. Seventeen senators now have woman secretaries. Two of them voted in the senate against woman suffrage—Borah and Moses. The baby senator "Young Bob" LaFollette, is one of the solons who are secretaried by young women. The bobbed-haired group, which now has a gallery to itself in the senate, contains some of the shrewedest politicians on Capitol hill.

FUN FOR THE WHOLE FAMILY

By Flo Frederick

The Ritzies say, "Come over,"

But not without a clover.

Bill Roscoe was soon to be taken into the Ritzie club. Even if he wanted to he couldn't have forgotten about it for one minute. His classmates were constantly eyeing him from behind their books or writing notes to each other and then looking at him significantly.

It was the second day since Bill had kept his appointment at the Ritzie carpenter shop and received instructions to speak to none of his friends under any circumstances. He had stuck to his promise to keep silence and his classmates had learned better than to tease him about it after their encounter with Marty and the twins on the day before. They were now busy watching for what would happen next, and scarcely for a minute did they let Bill out of their sight.

Even Bill was beginning to get a little worried for fear that something had gone wrong. The Ritzies had promised to send him intimes, pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole door and you will be admitted at once. Remember, you are still in silence."

"Pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole," repeated the stupified Bill. Why, he had never found a four-leaf clover in his whole life! If he could only ask one of his best friends to help him find one; but he was still on silence. There was nothing for it but to do his best, and he started out on the run for a patch of clover that he had often noticed on his way to school.

Squatting down in the midst of the big clover bed, he turned the little green flowers over one by one, hoping to find an extra leaf. Once he found a five-leafed clover and considered tearing off one of the leaves, but was afraid the Ritzies would detect it so he cast it aside and hunted harder than ever for a four-leafed one. There were only fifteen minutes left and he couldn't appear at the carpenter shop without it!

structions but no one had appeared with a message of any kind. His thoughts were interrupted by the ringing of the bell and his class was soon passing out into the cloakroom. He had just taken his cap off the hook when he felt a tug at his sleeve and whirled about to find a girl from one of the lower grades looking up at him.

"Are you Bill Roscoe?" she asked.

"Yes," answered Bill, anxious to get rid of her before his classmates saw her and started teasing.

The little girl only smiled an answer, slipped a note into his hand and disappeared around the corner of the stairs. Bill slipped the note into his shirt and took a swift look around to see if he was being watched. It was bad enough being teased about keeping silence, but to be seen receiving a note from a girl would be the last straw. His classmates had been engaged in a heated argument and the incident had escaped unnoticed. It was with a sigh of relief that Bill unfolded the scribled note and read:

"Initiation ceremony at 4:30 at the Ritzie clubroom. Knock three

He was so busy with his task that he hadn't noticed the circle of boys that had gathered around the clover patch. They were gazing at him in wonderment. Had he gone mad? Why would any one be pawing over a patch of grass like that unless something had gone wrong with his thinking machine! The boys were about to take pity on him and hurry him home to a doctor, when, with a sudden shout of glee, Bill jumped to his feet, dashed through the circle of boys, scarcely noticing them, and tore down the street, holding something aloft in his hand. The boys were more stupefied than ever at this and gave it up as a hopeless mystery. The Ritzies had always been too much for them to understand, and now old Tubby Bill was getting the same way.

Bill didn't stop to catch his breath until he reached the carpenter shop door. He wrapped three times and the porthole flung open. Proudly he handed in his four-leaf clover and waited breathlessly to see what would happen.

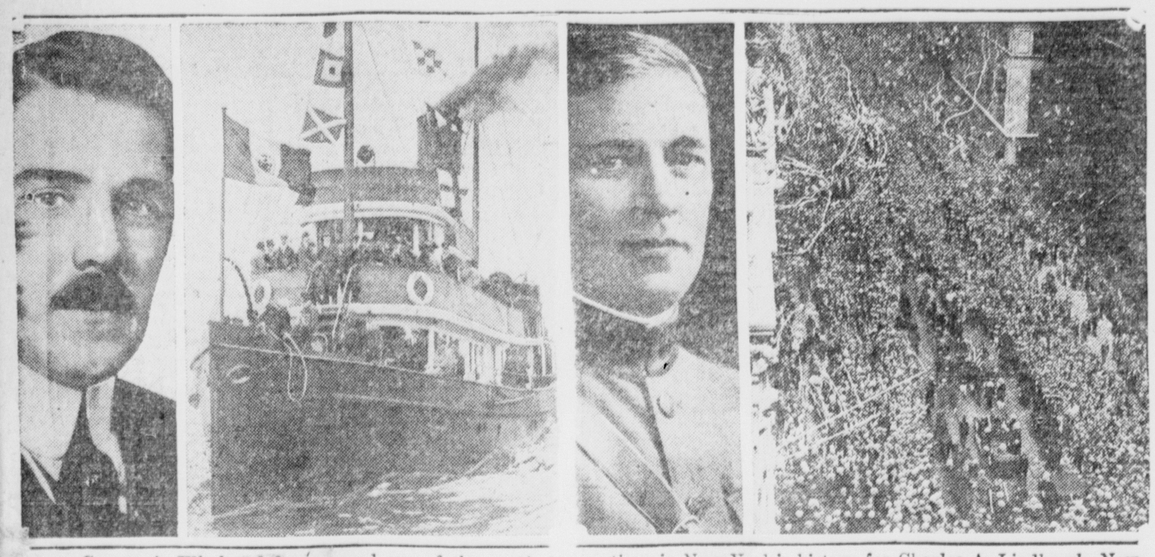
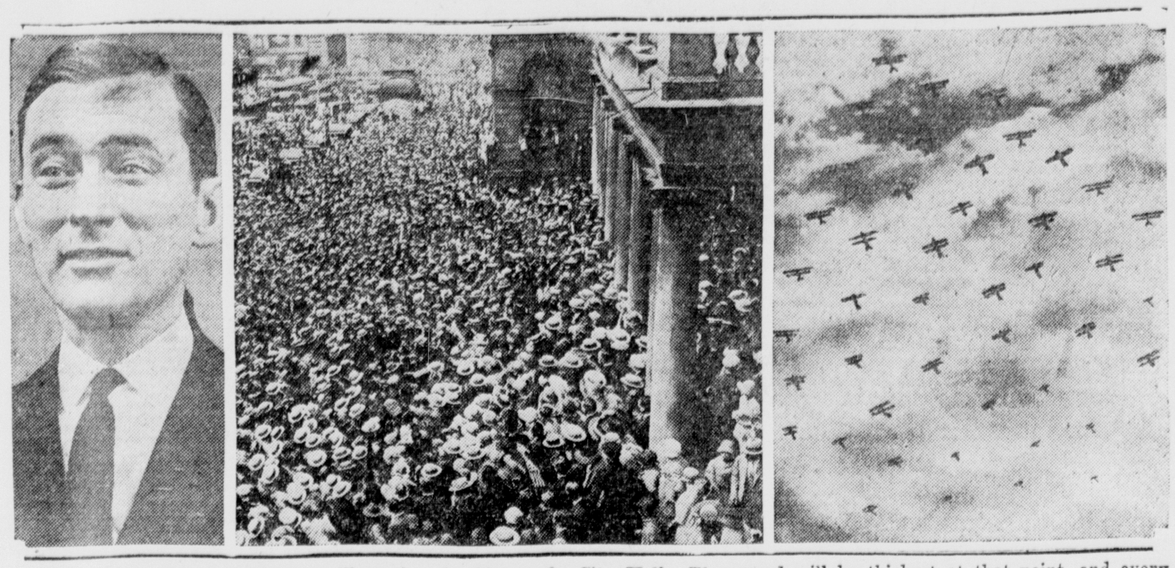
New York Holds Reception For Colonel Lindbergh



Grover A. Whalen, left, prepared one of the greatest receptions in New York's history for Charles A. Lindbergh, New York's latest hero. The tug Macom will bring him to the Battery. From that point, with Major General William N. Haskell, Grand Marshal, Lindbergh will move in triumphal procession to the City Hall, amid showers of confetti and ticker tape and the applause of the crowd.



Mayor James J. Walker will receive the flier at the City Hall. The crowd will be thickest at that point, and every square foot of ground and every bit of window space will be utilized for a view of the flier. In connection with the reception, New York will stage one of the greatest aerial parades in history. Two hundred planes, of every size and description, will fly over the length of the city, making a sight unsurpassed in the past.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED:

The entrance of America into the World war finds Phillip Wynne Tracy IV suffering from the collapse of a first passionate love affair. Wounded he had had a childish [illegible] with Natlee Jones. And Rod [illegible] to enlist. [illegible] to the training camp.

Finally the regiment is ordered back to New York, presumably bound for France. While in New York Phil meets Natlee and their love flaming anew, they plan to be married. The immediate departure of the troops, however, prevents this.

Phil's regiment is sent to the front soon after arriving in France and Phil is detailed on an extremely dangerous mission. Returning with important information he is wounded and Rod is killed trying to save his friend. Phil wakes in a hospital and receives the croix de guerre for bravery. Letters from his mother and Natlee only depress him.

At length he rejoins his outfit in the Argonne woods, but he looks so ill that he is sent to a motor school in the south of France. Three days after his arrival, armistice is declared.

John Aukland bent over Anne and lightly kissed her hair.

ANNE PLANS TO SEEK PHILLIP

THE order came on Christmas Day for Phil to go up into Germany, but it was not to his old outfit.

It was good, nevertheless, to be among the Americans again, for he was a part of the victorious army that was stationed at Coblenz and far about. He wrote to his mother and Natlee, but he had been moved about so much he was not sure they had gotten his letters—at least he had not heard from them since he left [illegible].

[illegible] girl attracted by [illegible] him, sometimes in words and sometimes by actions, that he was ready to practice Christian charity and forgive her enemy.

Phillip Wynne Tracy IV, however, told himself that his flirting days were over. Not one of these flaxen-haired girls ever gave him the intimation of the slightest thrill.

Once in a while one of them whose hair was yellower than the others would make him think of the lovely rain-silk bands about Natlee's head, and he would long once again to let his fingers thread its soft mass.

He picked up some lovely Russian lapis lazuli beads and a pair of earrings because he thought they would match Natlee's eyes.

For them he gave the last dollar he had, for he had not had any money from home since he left America. If his mother had sent it, it had miscarried.

Again he was ashamed to hang around when the mail was distributed. He grew to feel that there was something almost sinister about his name, which made it one no one wished to repeat.

At last one day, on the bulletin board, he read that a number of returning American soldiers who had had two years of college and who could produce 250 francs could have three months' work at one of the different universities in England and France.

How he wished he had made up the conditions and entered the university at Christmas, as his mother had wanted him to do. How he wished he had really saved the money he had paid for the lapis lazuli beads he had purchased for Natlee.

However, Phillip had never been discouraged by any obstacles if he wished to do anything very much. He made his application, saying that he had the requisite requirements and education.

"It is perfectly preposterous to think for a moment that among the other boys in my regiment I will be singled out from those who deserve it more," he said to himself cynically, "but it will be amusing to see how many lies I can make up for myself."

ANNE HUNTINGTON TRACY all her life dreaded when the anniversary of Armistice Day came around, for on the day that the war was declared over she was in the Walter Reid hospital at Washington, fully conscious that the whole world was determined to make as much noise as possible.

"Tell them to be still!" she would shriek with her hands over her ears. "Tell them to be still. I cannot bear it."

Her nurse tried to tell her that all Washington was holding jubilee because the guns had stopped firing and the killing of human beings had ceased—but Anne Tracy did not understand.

"The noise is killing me. Please stop them to stop," she kept begging.

For three days she had been delirious with flu, and the glorious relief which came from seeing thousands upon thousands of men and women going mad with joy, she did not know.

Even after the flu had run its course, her brain, overtaxed with the agony of suspense, refused to function normally.

Every noise that could not be kept from her room seemed to be torture to her. She repeated constantly, "Tell them to stop the machine guns"—or "the shell"—as the noise might be heavy or slight.

She had intervals when she would ask quite sanely, "Have you heard from Phil since he went back to the Argonne?" Then before they could answer her mind would wander, and she might speak as though the war was something she knew nothing about.

It was the last of January before Major Aukland or any one else was able to see her.

Then he had to take to her the distressing news that nothing had been heard from her son since the armistice.

"I do not think anything has happened to Phil, Anne," he said, "but I have been trying very hard to get some news from him ever since you have been ill."

The pale and wasted woman on the bed turned such anguished eyes upon him that he fairly picked her up in his arms saying, "Dear, dearest Anne, as soon as you are able, I will take you to Germany, for that is probably where he is. Anne, it breaks my heart to see you grieve. Will you not let me comfort you a little? Anne, dear, you know there has never been another woman in my life but you. I loved you before you married the father of your boy. Anne, be my wife, and we will go together to hunt him.

"You have years before you in which to be happy. Let me help to make them so," he pleaded.

"John, you are more than good to me," she said gently. "I am afraid I have spoiled your life. But for me, you might now have had wife and children."

"Dear Anne, do you not know that you are worth waiting for? Say that you will make me wait no longer. Let us be married immediately."

"I know why you are urging haste, John. In your unselfish love, you want to take care of me. I confess that being taken care of looks very good to me, but I cannot marry anyone until my boy is found.

"Think, dear, I may find him maimed in such a way that he will need my whole care. If that should be so, I could not ask you to share it with me, for I must not keep from you the fact that although I am very fond of you, yet Phillip will always come first."

"But, dearest Anne, what if you find your son perfectly well? Do you not know that some time, sooner or later he will leave you for some young girl? Anne, you have been alone all your life, and yet you are the one woman I have ever met who enjoys—yes, needs — companionship most.

"Darling, don't send me away from you again. I know I can make you happy."

MAJOR Aukland had been holding her in his arms as he would a child. Her head was on his breast. Now he laid her back gently and pulled the covers up under her chin.

Anne found his care and sympathy very comfortable. With a sigh almost of content she cuddled down into her pillows.

Major Aukland sat down beside her bed and took the one hand which was lying inertly outside the coverlet in his.

"Then, dear, I can begin to make arrangements to leave on the Mauretania the last of next week. With me to take care of you on the trip across, I know you will be well enough to go. I'll see the doctor now."

He started toward the door.

"Wait, John," Anne's voice, though weak, was decisive. The man came back to the bed and stood looking down upon her.

"I hope I will be well enough to start across the last of next week, but John, dear John, please do not press me for my answer until I have seen Phillip."

"You do not care for me, Anne?"

"Yes, dear, I do, but neither you nor I would be happy if Phil did not approve."

"He has no right to object," broke in the major, hotly. "For 20 years you have given up your life for him. Now you owe something to yourself."

"I am not quite sure, John, just what you mean by 'you owe something to yourself.' Do you mean that I must try and be happy? You should know that I could not be even content if I were estranged in any way from Phil. No, I do not mean that exactly, for I may not approve of his opinions or his actions in the future any more than I have done in the past, but I probably will not let him know it.

"In the short time I was married to his father I made the mistake of letting him see that I disapproved. I have come to the conclusion that even now, after the war, we women must still get from the men we love the things we want by our personality—which I am hearing a great many people call our 'sex appeal'—or by our diplomacy—never by the reason and righteousness of our desires.

"John, this little visit we have had this morning has been rather tragic, for it has shown me, and it must have shown you also, that we are old.

"When one reasons over the right or wrong of love, one is too old to love singly—or if young, it shows one is not interested.

"If we had been young, you would have picked me up and carried me away by the sheer force of your passion instead of talking it over with me as you have done. Get me the tickets for the trip, dear John, but let it be on some boat which sails a day or two after the Mauretania. We will meet in Paris."

"And I shall lose out, dear Anne, with the son, as I did years ago when we were young—with the father. However, I'll do as you wish, dear, and if I cannot have you for my wife, I will never put any other woman in the place I have always wanted you to fill."

John Aukland bent over Anne and lightly kissed her hair and left the room. As Anne turned away that the nurse might not see her face, she thought, "Oh, John, I wish you had kissed my lips and taken me in spite of any objections I might have made."

BAD MOVIES, MAMA SPANK!

BALLABOOSA, Ga.—Mrs. Mary H. Lloyd, who is 80 years old, understands now what is wrong with the younger generation. For four score years she got along without going to the movies. The other evening she attended her first motion picture performance, and the wickedness of the world was at once made plain. "No wonder girls are wild," said Mrs. Lloyd after the show. "If I had a daughter who went to any such place as a motion picture theater I'd turn her over my knee and spank her." The picture which so aroused the matriarch's wrath was Harry Langdon's comedy, "The Strong Man." It was produced under the auspices of the local W. C. T. U.

NEW YORK HAS NEW HONORS FOR ACE

Trans-Atlantic Ship Out Of Order—Strong Wind Bolws

WASHINGTON, June 13.—With a wave of his hand and a cheery grin, Col. Charles A. Lindbergh sent a speedy army pursuit plane into the air at Bolling Field at 8:54 o'clock this morning—bound for New York and another tremendous homecoming celebration.

A last minute bit of hard luck forced the youthful flyer to abandon his trans-Atlantic plane "The Spirit of St. Louis" on the field, and take an army plane for the two-hour journey.

The "St. Louis" didn't tune up right when mechanics started the motor. The trouble was a faulty cylinder, a "sweaty cylinder" they call it in the air service, and upon the advice of brother flyers at the field, Lindbergh reluctantly decided to accept a substitute plane it was a keen disappointment to him, for he had his heart set upon returning to New York in the same famous "bus" he left there in three weeks ago on the flight to Paris.

"With five million people waiting for you up there, you'd better not take chances on a forced landing or not getting there," they told him.

"Yes. Guess you're right," said Lindy," and reluctantly agreed to the shift.

The substitute was trundled out, a shiny little Curtis C-1 type, painted black and yellow. The fuselage bore a picture of the dome of the Capitol and the numerals "34" on each side. The under-surface of the wings bore "U. S. Army."

Lindbergh climbed in, and began to spin the motor. A small group of army flyers clung on to the sides of the cockpit, giving him suggestions as to the controls and the "goods" of the little racer. Lindbergh nodded quickly.

He shoved off in the teeth of a strong northeast wind, which had the flags about the field whipping stiffly in the early morning sunlight. The strength of the breeze may slow up his flying time to New York, although he was confident he would make it in two hours anyway. The distance is approximately 230 miles.

The field was muddy from last night's heavy rains, but it was accomplished without mishap either to "Lindy" or the escorting planes. The trim little Curtis taxied out, headed into the wind, and began to travel. Like a pert bird she started skimming head-on into the wind, gathering speed as the motor raced. The tail went up as she straightened to her work, and then she pulled the stick backward and soared aloft in a terrific burst of speed.

Two score planes accompanied him into the air, the staccato roaring of their motors drowning out the cheers of several thousand watchers, who despite elaborate military and police precautions had gathered at the field to see the getaway.

The first group of single-seaters preceded "Lindy" into the air, and the first observation group, composed of two-seaters, followed him.

Lindbergh bade goodbye to Washington with a flourish, and gave experienced flyers at the field a final thrill by his daring take-off. As his landing wheels left the ground at the end of the run, he "pulled the stick into his stomach," as they say slangily in the air service and zoomed straight up into the sky. But the little Curtis motor was sturdy and the never faltered. He banked over, raced nto greater altitude, did a loop, and circled the field twice while the two-seaters were getting off the ground in groups of three.

"Wow," said a pair of army pilots who witnessed his breath-taking get away.

He circled the field until his escorting planes were all up and going. Then he turned the nose of the little racer northeast by the compass, and roared away. In five minutes he was but a speck in the sun-shot haze of the early morning, and in ten minutes he was out of sight.

Commander Richard E. Byrd, the North Pole flyer, took off from the field in an amphibian naval plane soon after "Lindy" soared away.

After the departure, it developed that several days work probably will be required before the "Spirit of St. Louis" is again ready to fly. The engineering officer of the field reported that a cam follower (CO) was cracked, swollen and stuck. While it will not be necessary to tear down the engine to make the repairs, one cylinder will have to be removed entirely, it was said.

WILL USE PLANE

CLEVELAND, O., June 13.—The Thompson Products Company Inc., has purchased an airplane to be used for "hurry-up" trips of officials of the concern and for "special deliveries." Other planes will be purchased later, according to E. G. Thompson, vice president.

CROWDS GREET FLYERS IN GERMANY

"Hello, Broadway, here I come;

HONOR ACCORDED TO TRANS-OCEAN ACES WHEREVER THEY GO

Chamberlin And Levine Get Taste Of What Lindy Enjoyed

BADEN BADEN, Germany, June 13.—Although incognito, Clarence Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine are unable to escape adulation.

The two American flyers who ended their trans-ocean jump in Germany a week ago today, are here today for a rest with but little prospect of getting it.

Throughout their journey from Berlin their train was greeted by hundreds gathered at the stations and the conductor was forced to give them an extra compartment to hold the floral tributes hurled on the train.

At Karlsruhe the Association of Ex-Army Pilots presented Chamberlin and Levine with the insignia of their association and made them honorary members, thus, Chamberlin is the only former allied pilot to have the insignia of the German war pilots.

On arrival at Baden Baden the two flyers were taken by storm, 3,000 ardent admirers cheering them and the mayor and members of the city council extending an official welcome to them. The crowds carried the two fliers to their automobile upon their shoulders.

The Hotel Stefaine, where the two fliers registered, has suddenly become almost an American hostelry for in the past twenty-four hours more than 150 Americans have registered there.

Chamberlin today took account of cash on hand. He started for Europe with $11.60 and he has given away $1.60 as souvenir coins, but he still has $10, having found it impossible to spend a penny in Germany.

Chamberlin and Levine have decided to return to Berlin by commercial plane on Wednesday and will then fly to Bremen on Thursday to meet their wives.

Chamberlin received his first kiss from a German fraulein here. At the reception following his arrival an attractive girl, dressed in the quaint costume of the local peasant, forced her way to the side of the flyer, implanted a resounding smack and vanished. Chamberlin gestured helplessly in great embarrassment.

GOTHAM ROARS HUGE WELCOME AS "LINDY" ARRIVES IN HARBOR

Guns Boom, Whistles Shriek And 16,000 Police Fail To Keep Order As Flyer Returns To Metropolis As Air Hero

NEW YORK, June 13.—Aflame with color and bursting with enthusiasm, New York today roared a tumultuous welcome to Charles A. Lindbergh, who three weeks and three days ago blazed a glorious trail through the air from New York to Paris.

"Lindy!"

That was the affectionate greeting roared from millions of throats. Again and again, in thunderous volume, the huge throngs stretching from the Battery to Central Park, shouted that one word in a hysterical frenzy.

Guns boomed, harbor vessels shrieked, factory whistles blew, automobile horns honked and people went wild with admiration as Colonel Lindbergh made his triumphal entry into the city.

Nothing comparable to it has been witnessed in New York since the return of the famous Twenty-seventh division from the World War.

Even Admiral George Dewey's reception upon his return from Manila Bay in 1899 was surpassed and certainly the welcome was as great as that accorded General John J. Pershing when he returned victoriously from the World War.

Bedlam broke loose when "Lindy" in an army amphibian plane, descended gracefully in the gleaming waters of the harbor.

The big guns from Governors Island and Fort Wadsworth boomed their greeting; whistles and sirens on the hundreds of craft of all sorts, from majestic ocean liners to tiny tugs, that choked the harbor, were unloosed and from the green slopes of the shore, thousands of people let forth a mighty roar—"Lindy."

"Lindy" smiled shyly. He had expected a reception, but nothing quite like this. He waved to crowds lining the decks of the flag bedecked vessels. He was soon transferred from the cockpit of the city's official boat, the Macom, which was brightly dressed in flags from stem to stern.

Bands aboard the boats played stirring tunes as the Macom with the famous guest on deck, steamed up the harbor through a lane of several hundred vessels to pier A, at the battery.

Airplanes droned overhead in the bright sunlight, sweet music to "Lindy's" ears. He looked upward frequently, as the flyers executed fancy formations.

Fifty thousand people were massed around Battery Park when the Macom landed "Lindy" at the Battery. A hundred brightly groomed police horses, bearing mounted officers, pranced excitedly while their riders strove to control the straining crowds.

More than 1,000 policemen formed a solid cordon in the two blocks between pier A and the elevated station. From there to City Hall Park, where New York was to officially claim Colonel Lindbergh as her own, thousands of other policemen were stationed at intervals of ten feet. Half of the entire police force of 16,000 men were on duty somewhere along the line of march.

Preceded by an escort of 10,000 troops, "Lindy" was taken up through lower Broadway, between dense throngs of people, to City Hall, where his mother, Mrs. Evangeline Lodge Lindbergh, was awaiting to view the official reception of her son by the city.

At City Hall Park a huge throng assembled to witness the official welcoming in "Lindy's" honor. They occupied every available seat in three hastily constructed wooden grandstands and thousands more stood for blocks around.

It was a colorful assemblage. Women and girls, attired in bright colored gowns and waving flags, made up a large portion of this audience, but the men had their representation, too. Those in the grandstands had been admitted by special ticket. Mounted police experienced difficulty in keeping the crowd back of the ropes.

From the windows of nearby sky scrapers ticker tape and torn bits of paper descended upon the heads of spectators.

As "Lindy" came up from the Battery, officials on the reviewing stand entertained the spectators by introducing dignitaries.

When the band played various inspiring tunes, the various consul generals in the city were presented. So were all the following:

Major General James H. McRae and staff, Rear Admiral Charles P. Plunkett and staff, city commissioners, members of the board of aldermen, the board of estimates, and finally, the mayor and his military and executive aides.

At 12:40 p. m. the start of the parade of 10,000 troops that were escorting "Lindy" up from the Battery swerved in off Broadway, led by a band. This was the signal for a wild outburst of enthusiasm from the crowd.

NEW YORK, June 13.—Resplendent in flags and bunting and its millions of people seething with excitement, New York today eagerly awaited the arrival from Washington of Charles A. Lindbergh, air mail pilot and colonel in the United States Air Service Reserve, prepared to give beloved "Lindy" the most tumultuous reception ever accorded an individual.

Even the return of Admiral George Dewey from Manila Bay in September, 1899, and General John J. Pershing's triumphal entry into the city at the conclusion of the World War will be equalled, if not surpassed, in the degree of popular acclaim and adoration.

No event since the return of the famous Twenty-seventh division in 1919 has so stirred the emotions of the populace.

"Lindy" was to arrive at some landing field in the vicinity of New York in his army plane, transfer to an army Amphibian plane and descend in the waters of the lower bay where, amid a deafening din of harbor craft, he will be taken aboard the city's welcome boat, the Macom, for his triumphant trip to the battery and thence through the heart of the city. Secrecy shrouded the place at which Lindbergh was to land in his own famous plane because officials feared the possibility of disastrous consequences from the unprecedented crowds that await him at every point of vantage.

Long before the hour which Lindbergh was scheduled to arrive, the slopes along the sea wall, the streets of lower Broadway, City Hall Park, Madison Square, Fifth avenue, and the thoroughfares feeding into them, were black with humanity. East side, west side, all around the town, the sidewalks of New York were jammed as never before in their history. Battery Park, where "Lindy" will first step ashore, was bulging with thousands of people fired with the ambition to be among the first to roar their welcome to the returning hero, idol of the nation and of the world.

From the battery Lindbergh, preceded by an escort of 10,000 troops, will move on through teeming masses of humanity to City Hall, where he will be presented with the medal of valor by Mayor Walker. And late this afternoon he will reach the climax of the day when he will receive from Governor Alfred E. Smith at Central Park the New York State medal of valor.

Two million people——perhaps 3,000,000 or more——will take an active part in the ovation to the courageous youth who three weeks and three days ago stepped into the cockpit of "The Spirit of St. Louis" at Roosevelt Field, Long Island, and blazed a glorious trail through the air from New York to Paris. There were only a few persons on the field when "Lindy" embarked on that epochal adventure in the chilled dawn of a damp morning but there will be millions waiting for him on his return today.

The lone eagle of the Atlantic returns laden with high honors. He is now Colonel Charles Lindbergh. He has walked with kings without having lost the common touch. He has been awarded the distinguished flying cross by the president of his country. He has heard the peoples of the world acclaim his achievement and nothing has turned his head. He comes back the same modest, shy-looking, boyish "Lindy."

Eight thousand policemen, half of the entire force of the city, were on duty this morning, charged with the big task of keeping the huge throngs in hand. Thirteen ambulances, manned with doctors and nurses, will be in readiness along the line of march, prepared for any emergency.

A cloudy sky, carrying the threat of rain, deterred no one.

Boy Loses Toe On Left Foot—Jump Fails To Save Him

Herbert Bowermaster, 14, Locust St., was injured so severely when a northbound Springfield and Xenia traction car his an auto near the municipal waterworks plant, north of Old Town on the Springfield Pike, about 5 o'clock Sunday afternoon, that it was necessary for surgeons at McClellan Hospital to amputate the big toe on the left foot.

The youth, who is a cripple, attempted to leap from the car to safety but jumped in front of the approaching traction and was wedged between the auto and the front end of the traction car.

John Roberts, 35, also of Locust St., the driver, leaped to safety from the other side of the car, when it stalled on the crossing.

Bowermaster suffered injuries about the head consisting of cuts and bruises and both feet were bruised and lacerated. He was taken to McClellan Hospital by Frank Wagner, colored, Dunbar Ave., Dayton, where his injuries were treated by Dr. B. R. McClellan.

Bowermaster, with his father, Roy, two brothers and Roberts was fishing along the Little Miami River, and Roberts and young Bowermaster returned to Xenia to obtain a bucket in which to gather wild strawberries.

In returning to the river, the motor stalled as the machine was being driven across the car tracks in front of the northbound traction.

WILE SAYS:

Hello Lindy Capital Pauses Suggests Fuller Tonsil Politics?

By FREDERIC WILLIAM WILE

Exclusive Dispatch, Copyright, 1927

WASHINGTON, June 13. — There was more than the usual "mother touch" in the meeting at the White House between Evangeline Lindbergh and Grace Coolidge. Both women vaulted into the world's eye in the midst of lives that had strangely similar and humble origins. Perhaps the circumstance which the first lady of the land and Mrs. Lindbergh find most common to them is that by profession each is a school teacher. Today one is mistress of the White House; the other, the most envied mother on earth.

Comparatively little is known of the teaching career of either of them. Since fame overtook her, less than three weeks ago, it has leaked out that Mrs. Lindbergh, who teaches chemistry in a Detroit high school, is extraordinarily proficient in that science. Women in the Washington congressional set, who knew Mrs. Lindbergh when her husband was in the house, have been heard in recent hours calling her an American Madame Curie. Mrs. Coolidge, preceding her marriage in 1905, taught lip-reading in

SHOOTING CLAIMS ONE; ANOTHER HURT

NEWARK, O., June 13.—Fred Paul, 40, is dead, and his wife, Anna, is reported dying at a local hospital with a bullet through her brain, as the result of a shooting at the home of Mrs. Paul's father here Sunday afternoon. The husband, who had been estranged and separated from the woman for three weeks, called at her father's home and urged a reconciliation. When his wife refused to return to him, he suddenly produced a pistol and shot her, then shot himself, dying instantly. The couple are the parents of six children, ranging in age from 3 to 16 years.

LINDBERGH GETS MEMBERSHIP IN AERONAUTICAL SOCIETY

Flyer Declares Hawaii Flight Should Not Be Attempted Without Proper Navigation—Talks "Shop" Among Brother Flyers

WASHINGTON, June 13.— Col. Charles A. Lindbergh was entered today into the ranks of the immortals of aviation and science. It was the final honor conferred upon him before he left for New York to receive the acclaim of the great metropolis for his epochal flight to Paris.

The greatest figures in modern-day aviation attended a breakfast in the flyer's honor early this morning, and saw conferred upon him a life membership in the National Aeronautical Association, which has been conferred upon but nine other men in history; and the Hubbard medal by the National Geographic Society, which is reserved for the trail-blazers in history and science.

President Porter H. Adams of the National Aeronautic Association told "Lindy" that he well deserved to take his place beside the nine other holders of life membership in the organization. They are Wilbur, Orville and Miss Katherine Wright, Samuel Pierpont Langley, Octave Chanute, John J. Montgomery, Charles M. Manley, Glenn Hammond Curtiss and Thomas A. Edison.

The youth who seemed ill at ease in the pomp of an official celebration, was at home at the breakfast, where he could talk aviation with those who understood. He beamed his appreciation when Commander Richard Byrd, whom he beat in the race to Paris, personally presented the Hubbard medal.

Among the leaders in aviation present were chiefs of the army and navy air crops, Donald Hall, designer of "The Spirit of St. Louis,"; Capt. A. C. Read and Capt. H. C. Richardson, transoceanic fliers; Lieut. L. C. Maitland, world speed record holder; Glenn Martin, pioneer aircraft builder; Robert Nungesser, brother of the misisng French ace; Lieut. Russell Maughan, "dawn-to-dusk" flier; George K. Burgress, lighter-than air-craft designer and Dwight Morrow of J. P. Morgan and Company, whose committee recomended the "five-year air program."

In a characteristically brief speech after receiving the Hubbard medal from the hands of Lt. Com. Richard E. Byrd, Lindbergh spoke of the practicability of a California-to-Hawaii flight. Such a trip is feasible, he said, but he warned against attempting it by dead-reckoning the course, as he did on his New York-to-Paris trip.

"Aviation is on a sound business basis today," the young flyer told the distinguished audience of aviation specialists," and it must continue to be developed along these lines. Trans-Atlantic flying will come, but it will require sound gorund organization and extended research and direction by experienced men.

"There is a great interest at this time in a flight from California to Hawaii. This flight is entirely practicable, it can be done and it will be done. However, I hope no one tries to make it on the principle of navigation I used in my New York-to-Paris flight.

"If I had struck the coast of Ireland 300 miles north or south of where I did I still could have made Paris, but had I deviated any more I could not have made it because I would have been short of fuel. If an attempt is made to reach Hawaii by dead reckoning and the plane is a few degrees off the course and misses the coast there are several thousand miles of Pacific Ocean beyond, with small chance of a pilot's being picked up.

"I believe the flight should be made by radio navigation, or the pilot should carry a navigator."

His brother flyers at the breakfast gave their youthful compatriot, a hearty greeting. In presenting the Hubbard medal to Lindbergh, Lt. Com. Byrd referred indirectly to his own plans for a flight to Paris, which are now understood to be in abeyance.

"We were hoping to ge to Paris ourselves," 'said the naval flyer, "but Col. Lindbergh got there first, and we are all glad he did."

PLANE SIGHTED

RIO JANEIRO, June 13.—Fishermen arriving here today reported sighting what they believed to be an areoplane off the Macara Island. The plane may have been that of Major Sarmento Beires, Portuguese trans-Atlantic flyer who has been missing a week. Tugs have been dispatched to Marca Island to investigate.

NINETEEN HURT AS BUS STRIKES CARS

PHILADELPHIA, June 13.—Nineteen persons were injured today when a Philadelphia-bound bus collided with a number of machines in trying to avoid a collision with a taxicab on the Delaware River bridge. The bus skidded and slid into a long line of about seventy-five cars, shaking up scores of persons. Six machines were damaged badly, one car bursting into flames.

John Bryan, bus driver, of this city, was arrested on a reckless driving charge.

DIES SUDDENLY

NEWARK, O., June 13.—Somers Lee, 65, ill since last January, died here of heart disease, while sitting with his wife in a downtown confectionery.

WATROUS WINS FAME

OAKMOUNTAIN, Pa., June 13—Al Watrous, veteran of many golf tournaments, held the Indian sign today on the other 149 contenders for the national open crown. Al made a hole in one.

Watrous was playing with Walter Hagen against Johnny Farrell and Jimmy Johnston, when he sunk the pellet with his tee shot. It happened on the thirteenth hole which is surrounded by bunkers and traps.

Watrous took a mighty cut at the ball it came to earth six inches from the cup and rolled in. The thirteenth is a 164-yard hole.

EXPECT LENGEL WILL BE TRIED JULY 5; ARRAIGNED ON MONDAY

CANTON, O., June 13.—Former Chief of Police Saranus A. Lengel was to be arraigned here today, charged with first degree murder for alleged complicity in the slaying of Don R. Mellett, Canton publisher, last July.

Date of trial will probably be set for July 5, or shortly after that date.

Lengel was indicted, following submission of a statement to a special Stark County grand jury, by Floyd Streitenberger, ex-Canton detective, now serving a life term for his part in the crime.

Louis Mazer, Canton bootlegger, jointly indicted in the Mellett slaying, was to be taken to the penitentiary at Columbus either today or tomorrow. As reward for turning state's evidence, Mazer was allowed to plead guilty to manslaughter and sentenced to use his influence to effect Mazer's release at the end of five years, it was said.

Chicago Cooks, Rides, Sees, Thanks to Mr. Samuel Insull

International Illustrated News Staff Correspondent.

CHICAGO (I-I-N)—Chicago cooks breakfast on Insull gas, rides to work on Insull cars, listens to Insull grand opera, reads by Insull electric lights and, say some, votes for candidates picked by Mr. Samuel Insull.

One of the most spectacular figures in American history has been brought to the fore again by a series of movements that ended with him in control of Chicago's street cars, bus lines and elevated railroads. For twenty years Chicago has talked about consolidation of traction. Figure after figure in politics and finance has attempted it. Recently the Aldermen spent $1,600,000 in trying to devise a plan, and just about the time that they had given up it was announced that Insull had made his own plan and put it into execution.

Insull came to America in 1880 as secretary to Thomas A. Edison. He was born in England, and had started out as an office boy, studying stenography in his spare time. He made the acquaintance of Edison's London manager, and he recommended that Edison send for the twenty-one-year-old youngster. Edison did.

Insull is a natural manager. He did everything for Edison, handling bond transactions and buying his neckties. He soon found himself organizing Edison's businesses, and in 1892 was made second vice-president of the General Electric Company.

A few months later he resigned to take over the presidency of a Chicago electric company. With this as a toehold he climbed rapidly up the heights he holds today. He extended his electric interests all over the middle West, he entered the gas business, taking over a Chicago company on the verge of bankruptcy and making it pay, he took over struggling electric lines and made them pay, and half a dozen other public utilities came under his control.

The Chicago Opera Company was losing money, and Insull was asked to save it. He Insullized it, and now it's one of the best financed companies in America.

As a contributor to political campaigns, Insull is one of nature's noblemen. Senatorial investigations have revealed that he's been very generous, contributing, in some instances to both sides of a single fight.

The public utility problem has always been linked with politics, and some see a connection between Insull's interest in politics and his latest coup. Whether there is or not, it's certain that Insull is now probably the most powerful man in the city today, and that he's unified the traction lines of Chicago, which Chicago has wanted for years.

COMPLETE SELL OUT OF ALUMNI BANQUET TICKETS FORESEEN

Figuratively speaking, "standing room only" will be available for the annual banquet of the Central High School Alumni Association Wednesday night at 6:15 at the school building, as indications point to complete "sell-out" of tickets for the affair.

A few tickets remain but these are being disposed of in short order and reservations should be made as quickly as possible to insure accommodations.

A short speaking program has been arranged in connection with the banquet, interspersed by group singing, after which the annual election of officers will be the closing feature.

Following the banquet, motion pictures will be shown in the auditorium by R. Hayes Hamilton, this city, travelogue lecturer. As an additional attraction, dancing will be enjoyed in the gymnasium with music supplied by a nine-piece supper club orchestra, that is making its appearance in Xenia for the first time.

RICH or POOR?

Young or old, all suffer from intestinal stasis (constipation). The cause can be told with one word—

That word is "Civilization"! It means "over-eating", "over-work", "worry" and "nerve enervation", wrong foods, wrong drinks! Not enough animal exercise, such as running, jumping, walking, climbing, etc.

The nervous force that should go to the bowel-nerves is taken by the brain or other parts of the body, to perform "civilized duties—or excesses."

Avoid all the causes you can! You can't avoid all of them, therefore, you may need the aid of Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills, to nourish and tone-up the bowel-nerves; to stimulate the liver; to cleanse and purify the 32 feet of intestines where delayed activity has made poisons which cause biliousness, sick headache, irritable, grouchy feelings, and impaired efficiency in work or play.

Blackburn's Casca-Royal Pills are non-secret, prompt, and pleasant. Sold by druggists for 25 years and "Better Than Castor Oil." 45 pills—30 cts.

HORSE SENSE!

TOLEDO, O.—Are horses, in a last effort to compete with the ubiquitous automobile, learning to interpret the signal lights, without aid from the drivers? So says the owner of a delivery wagon who left his horse standing outside the Nasby building. When he was inside the building, the light at Madison avenue and Huron St. (which had been set against Huron St.) changed and the stream of traffic moved. The unattended horse took one look at the light, saw the "Go" signal and started off at a canter. He made the turn on Madison avenue, taking no notice whatever of the shouts of pedestrians, who noticed the driverless vehicle. Reaching Madison avenue and Superior St., the signal was against him and he duly stopped. What might have happened after this will never be known, as the driver arrived and took charge.

HIMSELF

NIAGARA FALLS—Well, folks John Daley is back home again sure enough. You know, John just clean disappeared from this town a coupla months ago, and nobody ever did know what had become of him. Just vanished, hide and hair. There was a body picked up in a cinder pit over to the roundhouse that some folks said was John, but there never was anything sure about it, and it did seem like John's disappearance was one of them unsolved mysteries. Well, now, John's back, and the funny thing is that he's in jail. It seems like his folks went in the house the other evening, and here was a man asleep in the bed, where no man had any call to be by right. So the folks just telephoned the police station, and the cops run around to the house and here this stranger was John himself. Well, it seems like John was sort of full of likker, and the cops had made the trip anyway and not wanting to make a trip like that for nothing they pinched John for luck and because he was kind of lit up. Don't that beat all? get out?

Lewis Post, Women's Relief Corps, will give a program in the rooms in the Court House, Tuesday afternoon at 2 o'clock, in observance of Flag Day. Immediately following the program, the Corps will go to the Cemetery, where flowers will be placed on the graves of deceased members.

NEW CURE FOR DEAFNESS

ERIE, Pa.—There never were many deaf jewelers in this town and now there's one less, as the result of a novel, if somewhat drastic cure effected here yesterday. J. Wayne Haskel, the discoverer of this new method, was having a round of golf, when a ball hit him on the ear and knocked him cold. When he came to his hearing was completely restored.

SHE WENT FROM BAD TO WORSE

Down to 98 Pounds—Finally Restored to Health by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Cleveland, Ohio.—"After having my first baby, I lost weight, no matter what I did. Then a doctor told me I would be better if I had another baby, which I did. But I got worse, was always sickly and went down to 98 pounds. My neighbor told me about Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, as it helped her very much, so I tried it. After taking four bottles, I weigh 116 pounds. It has just done wonders for me and I can do my housework now without one bit of trouble."—Mrs. M. RIESSINGER, 10004 Nelson Ave., Cleveland, Ohio.

If some good fairy should appear, and offer to grant your heart's desire, what would you choose? Wealth? Happiness?

Health? That's the best gift. Health is riches that gold cannot buy and surely health is cause enough for happiness.

ST. BRIGID SENIORS URGED TO SERVICE BY SPEAKER SUNDAY

"You will not do much for yourself unless you do a great deal for your fellow man," the Rev. James Ward, St. Joseph Church, Dayton, told seven graduates of St. Brigid High School at commencement exercises held in connection with a solemn high mass at St. Brigid Church Sunday morning at 10 o'clock.

The church was filled for the services which included the mass with the Rev. David Powers, pastor, as celebrant, the Rev. Father Ward as deacon and the Rev. Father Elbert, Dayton, sub-deacon, a processional of the graduates and other high school pupils and closed with benediction with the Blessed Sacrament.

Graduates and high school pupils sang the processional to organ accompaniment as they entered the church and the seniors were placed at individual kneeling benches in front of the sanctuary. Each senior was accompanied by a sponsor. The girl graduates were attired in white costumes of uniform design and their sponsors wore green frocks.

The Rev. Father Ward, beginning his address to the graduates, told them that commencement exercises at the mass was a fitting way to close the years of school work. Catholic education, he said, following the teachings of the Catholic church, teaches its children how to live and prepares them for death.

"Its education prepares the pupil mentally, morally and physically," he said. "Education without religion is not worthy of the name. While the Catholic church likes to see its children attain high places in the business wrold, is not averse to seeing them occupy prominent positions in the professions, yet the church has not so much regard for the temporal reward of her children as it has for their final destiny."

Closing he urged the graduates to "have a pure heart and clean intentions. You have been called to labor in the vineyard. Remember there is no one truly happy but those loving and serving the Master."

The seven graduates who received their diplomas were the Misses Helen Donovan, Elizabeth Killeen, Agnes Osborn and Pauline Scully and Leo Cain, James Kelble and John Geiger.

The choir sang the mass with special solo parts by Miss Eleanor McDonnell and Miss Ruth Galliger.

VALUE OF IDEALS TOLD SENIORS AT WILBERFORCE EXERCISES

"The Imperative Need of Imperial Ideals" was the subject discussed by Bishop W. A. Fountain, A. M., D. D., Atlanta, Ga., who delivered the baccalaureate sermon to the Wilberforce University graduating class, Sunday morning at 10 o'clock, in Jones Auditorium, Shorter Hall, where six hundred people gathered to attend the opening exercises of the sixty-fourth annual commencement of the oldest and largest colored educational institution of the country.

The general faculty, members of the graduating classes of the several departments of the school, and graduates of former commencements, met in the auditorium of Galloway Hall, and with President Gilbert H. Jones and Bishop W. H. Fountain at the head of the line, marched to Jones Auditorium.

Prof. Wm. A. Sykes, director of the musical department, was in charge of the musical program. Miss Grace Edwards, an assistant of the department, played the organ prelude, and the University Choral sang the opening hymn, "Holy, Holy, Holy." Rev. R. B. Smith, presiding elder of the New Jersey Conference, offered the invocation and Dr. J. C. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn., read as the scripture lesson, Job 28:12-28. Miss Lucile Dean and Robert P. Ecton were the leading soloists. President Gilbert H. Jones introduced the speaker for the occasion, who opened his remarks by saying that Rome was the center of financial and governmental strength of the world.

"Here lived the world's greatest orators, Caesar, Cicero, and Hortenshius. Here lived the world's greatest poets, Virgil, Horace and Ovid. Here lived the world's greatest generals, Pompey, Caesar and Titus—all proudly boasted that they were Roman citizens. The man or people who found not their ideals somewhere in the confines of this imperial city was not worthy of his existence, according to the so-called best thought of the times.

"If an idea is a mental image, form, or a representation of anything," said the speaker, "then an idea is something existing in an idea or intellect, hence an ideal is the ego of a idea. Ideals are mental visions, pictures flung upon the sensitive plate of the mind as real as any ever thrown upon the canvass by a stereoptician, and out of ideals the characters of people or individuals are made.

"Men may sneer and say they are impossible, too high for every day use, but without them character is an impossible thing. The hope of my race, or any other race, is securely in Christian education and high ideals. The rising generation must be taught to admire the highest and purest in human conduct. Christian education, through imperial ideals will lead to 'golden conduct' by means of an unerring instinct. America has prospered beyond the most sanguine expectations of her most ardent admirers, because of her imperial ideals embodied in her constitution, but she has flagrantly disregarded those high ideals until her citizens cannot truthfully sing, 'That this is the land of the free, and the home of the brave.

"The business ideal of a race, should be pure and substantial. Some who leave these walls today perhaps will not be privileged to matriculate elsewhere; but in the busy, active world you must take your stand, and if you will observe the Golden Rule, 'Do unto others as you would have them to do unto you,' success awaits you in the battle of life."

At the conclusion of the discourse the class arose and received the following charge: "The age in which we live is strange and evil and full of hope. Great are art, science and religion, but these are in their embryonic state. The sweetest notes in music are yet to be discovered. The lost chord is yet to be found. This real Christian life, or the Christ life, has not yet been fully lived. The race and humanity must have first line defense. We believe you will not break faith with your people, that you will ever stand for high ideals keyed to efficiency. Remember the world stands aside for man or woman with an idea who knows where he or she is going. Will you as college people answer the call for service? May we depend on you as our first line defense to do our difficult and intricate thinking?"

In the afternoon the address to the religious societies and Greek lettered organizations was delivered by Rev. J. Acton Hill, of Louisville, Ky. Rev. J. C. Caldwell, Nashville, Tenn., delivered the annual sermon to the graduating class of Payne Theological Seminary. At this meeting Dean George F. Woodson presided and the students attended in a body.

Monday evening at 8 o'clock, Rev. H. E. Stewart, W. Chicago, a former graduate of Payne Theological Seminary, will deliver the annual address to the Literary So-

CHAMBERLIN'S FLIGHT

When Clarence Chamberlin landed safely in Germany with the Bellanca monoplane Columbia after a successful non-stop flight from Long Island over a record distance his achievement immediately took on great importance in its relation to the comity of nations as well as the progress of aviation. But in lauding this truly Yankee flier for his epochal achievement of not only crossing the ocean but penetrating so far into Europe as a village not far from Berlin one need not feel that the exploit in any way belittles that for which Washington and New York are in the throes of preparation to welcome home Charley Lindbergh, whose mastery of the Atlantic aerial crossing from New York to Paris always will remain distinctive as that of a "lone eagle" who dared and accomplished what previously had been generally considered an impossibility or something approaching the miraculous.

For Chamberlin and Charles A. Levine, the inexperienced navigator who had the hardihood to go along in that capacity, Germany is giving a welcome which eminently is their due. When Chamberlin grimly set Berlin and not Paris as his destination he showed the stuff he is made of. His arrival there proves him to be entitled to a niche in fame as one of the great airmen of all times.

The achievements of Lindbergh and Chamberlin probably are the forerunners of flights which will make crossing the Atlantic or the New York to Berlin journey by air attract little more attention than do present day crossings of the Atlantic by steamships.

But it took a Lindbergh and a Chamberlin to dispose of some of the bugaboos which have been retarding the development of aviation and their success, although undoubtedly aided by mechanical developments in recent years to promote the safety of piloting planes, is largely a tribute to their efficiency and courage as flying men.

BUSY LEGIONNAIRE

The busiest man in the United States isn't President Coolidge. That distinction today probably is held by John J. Wicker, Jr., national travel director of the American Legion France convention committee. The job of getting 30,000 Legionnaires ready for the "second A. E. F.," which is to invade Paris in September, is almost as tough a proposition as the war department had, when it was preparing to ship a couple of million doughboys "over there." Wicker has put in about three years on the Legion's forth-coming pilgrimage. Hitherto the largest peace-time migration of Americans to Europe was the bar association's trip in 1924. The Legion caravan will be ten times the size of the lawyers' lark. General Frank T. Hines, now director of the veterans' bureau, supervised the ocean movements of American troops during the World War, and has given Wicker the benefit of the army's experience in 1917 and 1918. Wicker is a Virginian, a lawyer, and had overseas experience in the air service.

BRINGING HOME THE BACON

by FRED C. KELLY

WHEN MONEY IS AN OBSTACLE

A great manufacturing concern with selling branches all over the United States, has been dissatisfied all this year with the reports from two large cities in New York state.

Sales have not been large in proportion to the number of salesmen employed and considering the size of the two cities.

Last week the high - salaried president of the company became personally curious about the situation in those two places and sent a keen-minded investigator to get the facts.

The answer was at first a little hard to discover. All the salesmen were exceptionally intelligent young men, each with a personality that should have been able to charm birds out of the trees. Yet they didn't close enough sales.

Finally the investigator stumbled upon an explanation. These young men were mostly well born. That is, they came mainly from established families characterized by intelligence and success. Their parents and grandparents had been successful enough in business or professions to accumulate comfortable fortunes.

Surely, one would think, it is from successful parents that successful salesmen should spring and that probably was the theory which had led the local sales manager to select the men he did.

But belonging to financial successful families proved to be the seat of the trouble with these young salesmen. They had inherited small legacies from their ancestors. Not only that, but such inherited funds had been carefully left in charge of competent trust companies—which isn't surprising, for men capable of making and saving money would naturally want to safeguard it in their wills. The young men didn't even have a chance to lose their money and take a fresh start.

Nearly every one of the salesmen investigated in two different branch agencies had an independent income from trusteed funds amounting to from $100 to $200 a month.

It is interesting to note that no one had more than $250 a month. The average was probably less than $150. These salesmen could hardly be called wealthy. They could not live in the style to which they were accustomed without working. But nevertheless, they had less concern about holding their jobs and making good than if they had been without other sources of income.

In other words, these well bred young salesmen were handicapped by lack of incentive.

Their money was a costly luxury. It is quite conceivable that they might have more money ten years from now, and have more fun getting it, if they had inherited none.

If you were a sales manager, would you care to have your selling force made up of young men having independent incomes, always sure of a living without working?

The Theatre

By FLEET SMITH

The current season in Hollywood has been good to the Cinderellas. At least three little "extra girls" have become stars this spring. Each of them went to Hollywood with no intention of going into pictures—oh no—and in just a short time had joined the throng of "extras." The latest star discovered lived at Chester, Ill., proving that there is no geographical handicap in getting into the pictures. Her name is Nora Lane and she went to Hollywood to visit a friend.

After an appearance as an extra she was signed to star as Fred Thomson's leading lady and will no doubt be seen in "The Life of Jesse James" which Thomson is to make for Paramount. Fay Wray and Sue Carol have had parallel experiences. The former, a Hollywood high school student was discovered by Erich Von Stroheim and after playing the lead in "The Wedding March" will appear opposite Emil Jannings in "Hitting For Heaven." Sue Carol is a Chicago girl and had never seen a studio until she went to Hollywood on a visit. She has just been selected to play the lead in Douglas MacLean's "Soft Cushions."

The exquisite Esther Ralston and her husband, George Webb, are in New York for the expressed purpose of closing their "honeymoon apartment," which they rented soon after their marriage, but never lived in, owing to the star's call to Hollywood. Miss Ralston rushed to New York upon the completion of "The Modern Commandaments" in which she is being starred by Paramount. On her way she stopped off at her gold mine in Arizona to pan a little gold. One should always tarry a moment at a gold mine before starting on a Fifth Ave. shopping tour.

While discussing the thrills of panning nuggets and pay dirt, Miss Ralston was asked by the writer what she thought of gold diggers in general and the possibility of her being cast as "Lorelei" in the film version of "Gentlemen Prefer Blondes."

"There is such a vast difference between digging gold in Arizona and gold digging on Broadway that I do not feel qualified to discuss the latter occupation," she said. Miss Ralston said that although she had frequently been mentioned for the part by "her public," she did ont crave the role as she did not believe she could properly portray the typical American gold-digging blonde.

Pola Negri and her husband, Prince Serge Mdivani, recently married in France, have returned to America. The Princess announced to reporters in New York that she would continue to be Miss Negri to her friends and in fact, to everybody. She wants it known that she did not marry a title and that she is supremely in love. The Prince does not want to be known as Mr. Pola Negri, neither does he want to retain his title. He is very much American and a splendid fellow. Following his impoverishment resulting from the Russian revolution, he came to America and with his brother entered college, where they were very popular. His brother married Mae Murray. On her return to Hollywood Miss Negri will resume her work in pictures for Paramount. Her next, "Barbed Wire," is said to reveal her at her best. This picture was directed by Rowland V. Lee.

SNEEZING

I suppose someone will say: "What does sneezing amount to?" My reply would be: "A great deal."

It is a very important procedure; it may mean the spreading of disease and its subsequent development in hundreds of cases, and may even lead to the sacrifice of many lives.

If that is so, it is neither insignificant nor unimportant. When the ends of certain nerve fibers in the nose and the throat are irritated or stimulated, the immediate response is a sneeze. This irritation may be produced in a variety of ways, by a draught of air, by tickling with a feather, a pinch of snuff, dust of almost any kind, the pollen of certain plants, and any of these, or irritants of many other varieties reaching certain portions of the mucous membrane of the nose, will at once excite a more or less violent attack of sneezing.

The same thing takes place when certain portions of the throat are irritated by food or drink that is too hot or too cold, by any substance that is rough and irritating or even by certain emotions.

Snezing is not confined to any age or period of life, but of course the mucous membrane of some people is much more sensitive than that of others. This explains why some have colds or hay fever or nasal catarrh all the time, while others are comparatively or entirely free from it.

It is perfectly evident that the tendency to attacks of sneezing is inherited with a great many individuals, for they manifest it with almost the first breath they draw after coming into the world. What happens in sneezing? Usually a more or less prolonged inhalation, opening of the mouth, elevation of the tongue and pressure upon the teeth or palate, and then an explosive exhalation which may be repeated any number of times, according to the intensity of the impression and the sensitiveness of the mucous membrane. With some, the sneezing is unattended by any discharge, but with the majority of people there is an emission of fluid or vapor from the mouth, frequently from the nose, and very often from the eyes.

Now the mouth and nose constantly contain a great variety of bacteria and it often happens that some of these bacteria are of a virulent character.

The person carrying them may be immune to them at the time or perhaps permanently.

But suppose such a person sneezes in the presence of somebody who is susceptible and liberates a swarm of these germs which are at once taken up by the one who is susceptible. This is not theory nor imagination, for it has happened repeatedly. Therefore, the point which I wish to emphasize as strongly as I can, is that whenever there is an inclination to sneeze, the mouth and nos should immediately be covered with a handkerchief or something which is equally effective and protective.

It is not polite nor decorous, and is certainly ill-mannered to spray a person with the moisture of sneezing, but worse than that is the possibility of liberating germs which may be the means of doing harm to others.

SIGNIFICANT SAYINGS OF THE DAY

"Legislation, not only in New Jersey, but in all of the other states, and in the nation itself, has reached a condition which is startling, if not alarming. It is against this volume of laws that I am making a plea that in the future we have fewer and better laws. It will be found many times that the remedy to social evils can be obtained with no new legislation whatever, and may be cured by applying some of the fundamental rules of common law, which we now possess."—William T. Read, president New Jersey State Bar association.

"Cancer is not a plague before which we must hopelessly succumb, for early treatments will cure it. What starts cancer, we do not know, but we do know that at first it is purely local, and easily removable. It is a local lesion. Take away the disease spot and the patient is cured. There are thousands of people, leading ordinary, normal lives, who have been cured."—Dr. Arthur H. Evans, cancer specialist, Westminster Hospital.

"The Chinese and Japanese look at the immigration question very differently from the Americans, and this we shall try to understand at the meeting of the Institute of Pacific Relations in Honolulu on July 15. We shall also take up the question of the high cable tolls that keep down the volumes of news from the Orient."—Dr. Henry Suzallo, former president University of Washington.

Little Old New York

NEW YORK June 13.—At a club the other night a writer was complaining that his financial worries were so great that he could not get his mind on his work, and so his financial condition was getting steadily worse.

"Nonsense," said a successful publisher. "Don't you know that all of the finest poetry and the best literature are produced by poets and novelists living on crumbs in garrets?"

"I know nothing of the kind," answered the writer. "If what you say were true, the present state of American literature should be more flourishing in undying masterpieces; for you publishers are disposed to ration us with crumbs."

At the corner of Fifth avenue and Fifty-ninth street yesterday I saw a maroon colored limousine of foreign make, the tonneau of which had no side windows and only two small, oval windows, one in the front and one in the back. The chauffeuer, of course, sat in a seat in front; but the owner of the car was entirely shut off from the stares of the vulgar.

This limousine looked somewhat like an expensive and luxurious armoured car, and it attracted a swarm of people as it waited at the curb. I stood for some time, hoping to see the owner come out of a shop and get into it. I did this because I wanted to make up my mind as to one of the two possible reasons that, it occurred to me, any one should have a car especially designed like that. One of the reasons might be that the owner is a snob who does not wish to look upon the common mob or have the common mob look at her or him. The other reason might be that the owner was physically so afflicted that he or she did not wish to be gazed upon. I never found out which was the true reason.

The importance of timeliness in reading matter and the importance of not being ahead of the public taste is strikingly exemplified in the great sale of "The New Medical Follies," by Dr. Morris Fishbein. This book is a best seller among the non fiction books.

The first chapter, which runs to nearly three-quarters of the book, is an encyclopedia of the fake cures, quackeries and psycho-therapies of the medical world. Eleven years ago H. L. Mencken published almost precisely the same list, and a much more extensive one than Dr. Fishbein's, as a supplement to "A Book of Burlesques." Mencken called it "A Genealogical Chart of the Uplift."

Mencken got $100 in advance royalties on the "'Book of Burlesques," out of which he had to pay a stenographer for typing the book $40. About a year's work netted him, then, about $60. During the intervening eleven years, however, his books have become very profitable sellers. And it is a satisfaction to note that first editions of "A Book of Burlesques" are so rare and so much in demand that they bring almost as much per copy as was Mencken's profit out of the book the first year it was issued.

The number of men (?) with make-up on their faces seems to be increasing in the neighborhood of Times Square, and is making that district more and more distasteful to normal people. These mincing creatures have their eyebrows plucked, their eyelids blacked with mascara, their cheeks and lips rouged. It is bad enough to see how much the women on Broadway are over-painted and overmade up. Some of the younger women look like circus clowns, with their faces powdered dead white, their eyebrows made artificially long with a black pencil, and their lips painted very thick. But these painted sissy boys make one want to rush for the fire-axe.

A new development in the night life of Broadway is the terror that has been struck into the hearts of some of the newspaper men who make their living by writing about the theaters, the night clubs and the life of Broadway. Two or three newspaper men who have pictured the life of the night clubs as not quite as decorous as a Sunday school picnic have been waylaid and beaten up by thugs presumably in the employ of night club operators or in the employ of gunmen who are among the big spenders at the night clubs.

There was a time when two or three small publications battened upon blackmailing anyone connected with Broadway who was thought to be drawing down a decent salary or making a fair living. Scandal was cooked up about them or inneuendoes prepared in proof form for insertion in the magazines. The editor of the publication would then send the proof around to the victim and tell him or her that unless the victim kicked in with a full page advertisement, the libellous paragraph would be printed.

The libel laws were evaded by subterfuges like that of asking a question of a scandalous nature, and not giving the answer. To frame the same insinuation as a statement would be libellous under the law, but a question would not be. Libel suits were brought, but the editor would always show himself insolvent, and the victim could not recover even in the event of winning the suit. Reputations were blasted, disgraceful insinuations were made without any apparent foundation. It is true that one such editor was caught in attempted blackmail and that he spent a term in Atlanta prison; but the graft seemed to have died out.

Now there exists the other extreme. A commentator on Broadway night life may not publish legitimate news without incurring the possibility of being beaten up by hired thugs.

How to Achieve Beauty

SUMMER HAIR PROBLEM

I have told you before that the texture of the scalp follows, to a considerable degree, the texture of the skin; that is, it is either normal, dry or oily, and summer, with its outdoor life and scorching sun brings hair problems to all but to some in greater degrees than others.

If you possess an oily scalp you will not have as great a problem as the woman with a dry scalp, as the heat of the summer drys, to a considerable degree, the natural oils and you will do well to remember that the damage of the hot weather and drying winds will be considerable unless you counteract it with minute care.

So during the summer season, with its joy and freedom of outdoor life in such great abundance, you must redouble your energies in hair attention.

Be diligent with your brushing, use good stiff brushes and plenty of vim and vigor behind them. Whether the hair is long or short, brush it long and brush it often.

Because I have spoken of the drying effects of summer sun and winds do not misunderstand me and think I do not approve of sunlight and air for the hair, because I most heartily do, and they are among the greatest tonics. I am simply warning you against the excesses that are always criminal—such as going for any length of time without a hat while sitting, standing or walking in the broiling sun. The right knid of summer air is as good for the hair as too much scorching sun is bad.

Pale blonde hair, especially, should not be exposed to the direct rays of the summer sun, or it will be inclined to take on a lifeless hue.

However, sunning and airing the hair in the right way is most beneficial. For instance, it will do your hair lots of good, no matter what type of scalp you possess, if you stand or sit in the open window on a summer morning when the sun is streaming in and let the life-giving rays of the sun pour their energy and vitality into your hair and the air sweep through it. If your hair is long you should loosen it and let it fall down over your shoulders and back so that the sun and air can penetrate and if your hair is bobbed, you should shake and ruffle your short locks. The hair will respond to this sun and air treatment as a wilting flower to a summer rain.

Police Raid Reserves' Winning Streak; Divide Two

Result Leaves Loop Leadership Still Unsettled Between Dayton Police And Xenia—Locals May Withdraw

RESERVES' WINNING streak of seven in a row was smashed by the Dayton Police Sunday afternoon at Washington Park, the minions of the law winning the first game of a double-header 8 to 4 while the Reserves earned an even break by winning the aftermath 7 to 4 in seven innings.

By dividing the twin bill, the two clubs continue in a tie for leadership of the Buckeye League with indications the deadlock will not be broken until such a time as a third meeting is scheduled later in the season.

Up until the Sunday bargain attraction, neither club had lost a game this season.

Misplays afield cost the Reserves the opening contest. Payton, who lost his first game of the year, and the veteran Lape, staged a pretty hurler's battle for seven innings but with victory in their grasp, the locals went to pieces in the field in the eighth inning, the coppers scoring five runs on three hits, five errors and a mixture of dumb and indifferent baseball.

Keifer led the Reserve batting, punching out a single and home run. The circuit smash came with one on base in the third inning. Tangeman and Scott also cracked out two hits. Gaylor led the Police with a double, single and walk.

Hits of the long distance variety won the closing game for the Reserves, together with the brilliant support accorded Cyphers in the field. The final affair was a revelation, for whereas the local nine fielded raggedly in the opener, exactly the contrary was the case in the nightcap and Cyphers was saved time and again by marvelous support.

Tangeman pounded out a home run and triple, the Reserve shortstop a triple and double and Keifer a long triple. Reserves were outhit in both games, 8 to 6 in the opener and 9 to 8 in the second contest.

The management of the local club will attend a conference of league officials Monday night and it will be decided at this time whether the Reserves will remain in the circuit or withdraw.

STRANGER WAS JOHN, HIMSELF

NIAGARA FALLS—Well, folks, John Daley is back home again, sure enough. You know, John just clean disappeared from this town a coupla months ago, and nobody ever did know what had become of him. Just vanished, hide and hair. There was a body picked up in a cinder pit over to the roundhouse that some folks said was John, but there never was anything sure about it, and it did seem like John's disappearance was one of them unsolved mysteries. Well, now, John's back, and the funny thing is that he's in jail. It seems like his folks went into the house the other evening, and here was a man asleep in the best bed, where no man had any call to be by right. So the folks just telephoned the police station, and the cops run around to the house, and here this stranger was John, himself. Well, it seems like John was sort of full of likker, and the cops had made the trip anyway, and not wanting to make a trip like that for nothing they pinched John for luck and because he was kind of lit up. Don't that beat all get out?

DOUBLE HEADERS ON PROGRAM OF LEAGUE

Double-headers were the order of the day in the Buckeye League Sunday afternoon, because several contests scheduled for earlier in the season were postponed because of rain.

Beavertown Reds took both games of a twin bill from Harshmanville on the Beaver diamond by scores of 6 to 4 nd 7 to 4. The final contest was limited to five innings, Beaver winning by counting all seven tallies in the third frame.

Bellbrook and the Osborn Miami Cements split two games at Osborn, the visitors winning the first 5 to 3 and Osborn the second 1 to 0.Both games were pitchers' battles.Osborn won the second game in the last half of the ninth round.

Xenia Reserves and Dayton Police broke even in a double-header at Xenia, leaving the league leadership still undecided.

BAYLIFFS DIVIDE DOUBLE HEADER IN TRIANGLE CONTEST

Bowersville Bayliffs broke even in a double-header with Wilmington on the latter's diamond Sunday afternoon in the Triangle League, losing the first 1 to 0 and copping the final 13 to 1.

Both contests were originally limited to seven innings, but the first game was forced into an extra inning.

The Bayliffs were held to one hit by D. Shadley in the first game, a safety by N. Murrell. Helky was almost as good, yielding four hits, three of which were bunched for the winning tally in the eighth round.

The second game was an easy victory. Helky bettered his previous game by allowing only two hits and one run, while Shadley failed to repeat his wonderful performance of the opening game and was soon batted out of the box.

Wilmington used five hurlers in the nightcap, all of whom were ineffective.

Bowersville will play the league-leading Spring Valley nine next Sunday, June 19 at 3 p. m. The game will be the first meeting with the leaders this season.

In another Triangle League game Sunday, Spring Valley retained its position by defeating Jamestown 9 to 8 in ten innings.

AUTO CAMPAIGN IS COSTLY TO PASTOR

OTTAWA, O., June 13.— The automobile industry chalked up another victory here today when the Rev. Frank M. Karns resigned pastor of the Trinity Methodist Church departed for Toledo to engage in private pursuits.

The Rev. Karns disagreed with his congregation, and is reported to have opposed automobile riding especially when it was not necessary for church purposes. His parishioners said he termed it an instrument of the devil in the hands of ordinary persons.

The church will dispense with the services of a pastor until after the West Ohio Methodist Conference next fall.

CRACKERS ARE GREAT: MAKE BOW LEGS STRAIGHT

CHICAGO.—H. E. Van Norman is a man exceeding smart and wise; he knows his p's, he knows his q's, he also knows his l's. As long as fashion's foibles dictate skirts so very brief, the girls whose legs are not so straight are filled with woe and grief; for a girl's legs may be crooked, and if fashions are concealing it matters not at all, but now, when dresses are revealing each maiden's limbs to all the world, Dame Fashion's hardest blows are showered on the flapper who must show her beau her bows. Now comes H. E. Van Norman with advice that's smart and sage: "Eat more good food," he tells the girls, "and then you'll be the rage. More calories and vitamines will make your bowlegs straight: lunch every day on crackers, and you'll be feeling great." Thus comes true science once again to dry up human tears, and for H. E. Van Norman all the bowlegged girls shout "Cheers!"

THESE ARE THE ANSWERS TO THE QUESTIONS ON PAGE FOUR

1. President Poincare of France has announced that he hoped to get better debt settlement terms from the United States.

2. Clarence Chamberlin and Charles Levine have formulated a plan to invest $2,000,000 in establishing a transatlantic commercial airplane line.

3. Richmond, Va., reports an earthquake shock which rocked houses, but caused no serious damage, at 2:17 a. m. June 10.

4. On June 10 Commander Francesco de Pinedo, Italian intercontimental flyer, started from the Azores on his flight back to Italy.

5. Ray and Roy de Autremont, twin brothers, were arrested in Steubenville, O., for a train robbery in Oregon after a four-year search.

6. The National Broadcasting company hooked up the largest number of broadcasting stations ever put on the air in reporting Captain Lindbergh's reception at Washington.

WILE SAYS:

a school for the deaf at Northampton, Mass. The wife of the president and the mother of the hero found a wealth of mutual interest during their historic hours together in Washington.

It happens that one of the most novel of a myriad of suggestions for enduringly honoring Lindbergh comes from Mrs. Coolidge's own town. The Vermont State Chamber of Commerce, at Burlington, proposes that some American composer worthy of the task proceed to write a Lindbergh "flight symphony." The chamber says: "Well has it been observed that words fail to express what needs to be expressed in connection with Lindbergh's achievement. Nothing could be more musical than that indescribable flight, the perfect personality of the flier, and the great recognition of a great event by the people of France. What movements there could be in such a symphony after the perilous taking-off flight over land and sea, by a lone aviator, with a whole world thinking about him—flight by day and by night, and finally a burst of light and an ovation by a whole people."

Political Washington paused in the midst of its Lindbergh complex to gasp over the little "runin" between President Coolidge and Senator Smoot on the question of a special session of congress. The G. O. P. high priest from Utah emerged from the executive sanctum and authorized the statement that the president would convene congress in October. No sooner had that word been winged to the country than Mr. Coolidge issued a devastating denial. It was accompanied by the stern assertion that when there was anything to announce about a special session, the president would be his own broadcaster. Nobody imagines that the White House meant to rebuke the all-powerful chairman of the senate finance committee. But it isn't the first time that Mr. Coolidge has taken occasion publicly to resent the periodic practice of callers to tell the world what they gleaned at his desk before he was ready to have it known.

North Carolina Republicans, who are probably the most numerous of their breed anywhere in Dixie are to the front with the very newest thing under the 1928 sun. One of their spokesmen, rhapsodizing over the action of Governor Fuller, of Massachusetts, in appointing a committee to investigate the Sacco-Vanzetti case, deposes and says that it's big enough to earn Fuller national recognition. He therefore proposes that Republican history could well afford to repeat itself next year, whereby the presidential ticket would be headed by an Ohioan and tail-ended by a son of the Bay State—as it was in 1920. To that end he suggests Nicholas Longworth for president, and Alvan T. Fuller for vice president.

Ever since it became known that Senator Borah, Demosthenes of congress, has been reduced to a whisper by an operation for tonsilitis, Washington wags have hastened to say that everything Vice President Dawes wants to accomplish could be accomplished by removing tonsils on both sides of the senate aisle. Newspapers all over the country are now printing an advertisement bearing the photograph and autograph of Senator Curtis, of Kansas, administration leader in the senate. The advertisement recommends a certain brand of cigarets, and Curtis suggestively observes that nearly all senators smoke cigarets and find, to their joy, that the habit does not affect their voices.

Senor Honorio Pueyrredon, the ambassador of Argentina at Washington, is in the midst of an extensive tour of study in the agricultural areas of the middle west. He decided to spend his vacation that way instead of indulging, as most of his ambassadorial confreres at this season do, in the luxury of holidays on some fashionable seashore. Senor Pueyrredon will travel from coast to coast by automobile. His family is in the party and the caravan consists of two cars. The ambassador will inspect wheat farms, cattle ranches, sugar-beat plantations, fruit orchards and department of agriculture experimental stations. He's particularly interested in Uncle Sam's fight on the corn-borer and on hog cholera. Among several members of congress who paved the way for the Argentinian diplomat's expedition is Senator Kendrick, of Wyoming, who is one of the country's great stock growers.

Ambassador Houghton is tarrying in Washington on leave from the Court of St. James' at London. Our envoy to Great Britain is found by capital correspondents conspicuously less communicative than he was in the spring of 1926, when Mr. Houghton's observations on the European situation created a near-crisis "over there" and a storm in the United States senate. Private affairs largely, the ambassador asserts, brings him home at this time. The forty-first reunion of his Harvard class is one of the Houghton missions on native heath. The ambassador is loud in praise of Lindbergh's bearing in England. "He's a boy of whom we can all be very proud," Mr. Houghton avers, "for he has received honors unprecedented and kept his head."

"The Making of a Law," is the title of an informative address to be delivered next week by Mrs. Martha R. Gold, secretary to United States Senator George H. Moses, of New Hampshire, in Kansas City. Her forum will be the national convention of the Kappa Beta Pi legal sorority. Mrs. Gold, in her non-secretarial incarnation, is a lawyer. Seventeen senators now have woman secretaries. Two of them voted in the senate against woman suffrage—Borah and Moses. The baby senator "Young Bob" LaFollette, is one of the solons who are secretaried by young women. The bobbed-haired group, which now has a gallery to itself in the senate, contains some of the shrewedest politicians on Capitol hill.

BRINGING UP FATHER — By GEORGE McMANUS

By Flo Frederick

The Ritzies say, "Come over,"

But not without a clover.

Bill Roscoe was soon to be taken into the Ritzie club. Even if he wanted to he couldn't have forgotten about it for one minute. His classmates were constantly eyeing him from behind their books or writing notes to each other and then looking at him significantly.

It was the second day since Bill had kept his appointment at the Ritzie carpenter shop and received instructions to speak to none of his friends under any circumstances. He had stuck to his promise to keep silence and his classmates had learned better than to tease him about it after their encounter with Marty and the twins on the day before. They were now busy watching for what would happen next, and scarcely for a minute did they let Bill out of their sight.

Even Bill was beginning to get a little worried for fear that something had gone wrong. The Ritzies had promised to send him intimes, pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole door and you will be admitted at once. Remember, you are still in silence."

"Pass a four-leaf clover through the porthole," repeated the stupified Bill. Why, he had never found a four-leaf clover in his whole life! If he could only ask one of his best friends to help him find one; but he was still on silence. There was nothing for it but to do his best, and he started out on the run for a patch of clover that he had often noticed on his way to school.

Squatting down in the midst of the big clover bed, he turned the little green flowers over one by one, hoping to find an extra leaf. Once he found a five-leafed clover and considered tearing off one of the leaves, but was afraid the Ritzies would detect it so he cast it aside and hunted harder than ever for a four-leafed one. There were only fifteen minutes left and he couldn't appear at the carpenter shop without it!

structions but no one had appeared with a message of any kind. His thoughts were interrupted by the ringing of the bell and his class was soon passing out into the cloakroom. He had just taken his cap off the hook when he felt a tug at his sleeve and whirled about to find a girl from one of the lower grades looking up at him.

"Are you Bill Roscoe?" she asked.

"Yes," answered Bill, anxious to get rid of her before his classmates saw her and started teasing.

The little girl only smiled an answer, slipped a note into his hand and disappeared around the corner of the stairs. Bill slipped the note into his shirt and took a swift look around to see if he was being watched. It was bad enough being teased about keeping silence, but to be seen receiving a note from a girl would be the last straw. His classmates had been engaged a heated argument and the incident had escaped unnoticed. It was with a sigh of relief that Bill unfolded the scribled note and read:

"Initiation ceremony at 4:30 at the Ritzie clubroom. Knock three

He was so busy with his task that he hadn't noticed the circle of boys that had gathered around the clover patch. They were gazing at him in wonderment. Had he gone mad? Why would any one be pawing over a patch of grass like that unless something had gone wrong with his thinking machine! The boys were about to take pity on him and hurry him home to a doctor, when, with a sudden shout of glee, Bill jumped to his feet, dashed through the circle of boys, scarcely noticing them, and tore down the street, holding something aloft in his hand. The boys were more stupefied than ever at this and gave it up as a hopeless mystery. The Ritzies had always been too much for them to understand, and now old Tubby Bill was getting the same way.

Bill didn't stop to catch his breath until he reached the carpenter shop door. He wrapped three times and the porthole flung open. Proudly he handed in his four-leaf clover and waited breathlessly to see what would happen.

Read in tomorrow's story what happens to Bill after the Ritzies get him inside the carpenter shop.

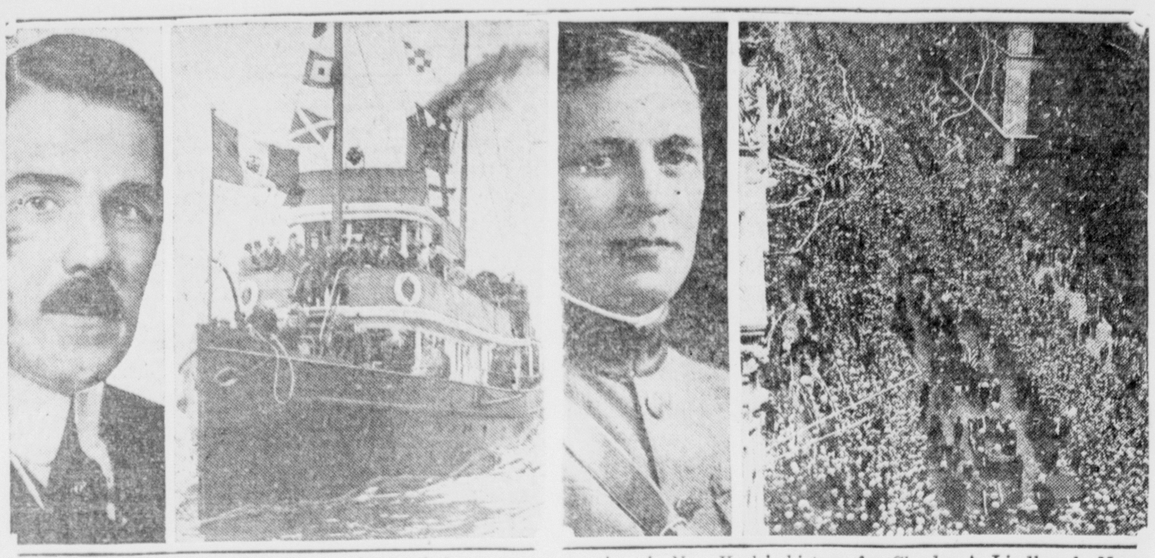
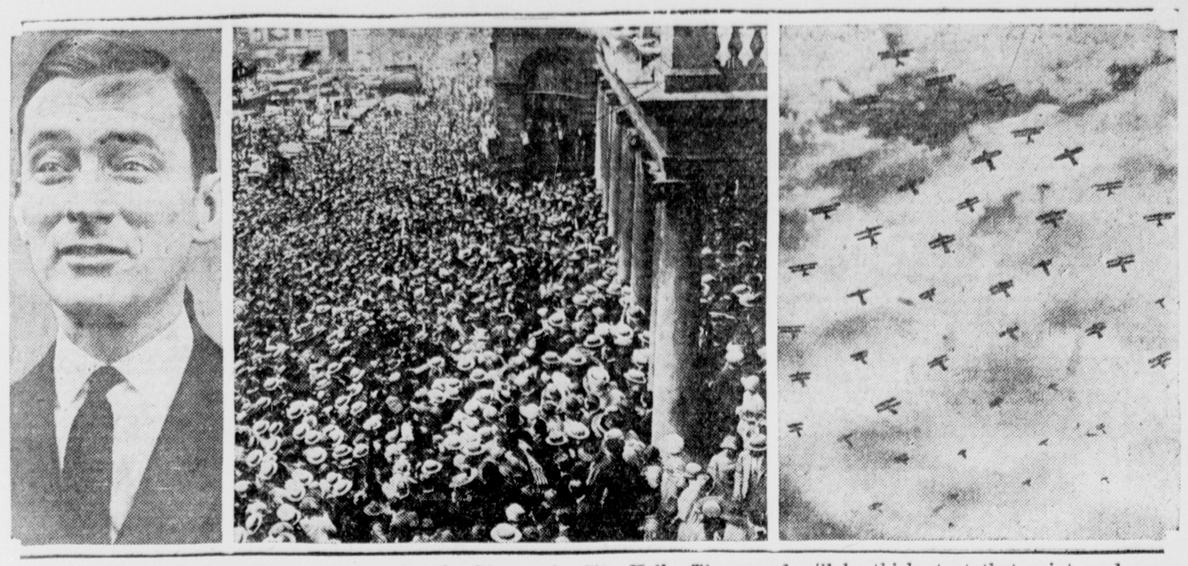
New York Holds Reception For Colonel Lindbergh



Grover A. Whalen, left, prepared one of the greatest receptions in New York's history for Charles A. Lindbergh, New York to Paris hopper. The tug Macom will bring him to the Battery. From that point, with Major General William N. Haskell as grand marshal, Lindbergh will move in triumphal procession to the City Hall, amid showers of confetti and ticker tape and the applause of the crowd.



Mayor James J. Walker will receive the flier at the City Hall. The crowd will be thickest at that point, and every square foot of ground and every bit of window space will be utilized for a view of the flier. In connection with the reception, New York will stage one of the greatest aerial parades in histo ry. Two hundred planes, of every size and description, will fly over the length of the city, making a sight unsurpassed in the p ast.

WHAT HAS HAPPENED:

The entrance of America into the World war finds Phillip Wynne Tracy IV suffering from the collapse of his first passionate love affair. Before this he had had a childish engagement with Natlee Jones.

Phil and Rod are the first to enlist. They go to a training camp.

Finally the regiment is ordered back to New York, presumably bound for France. While in New York Phil meets Natlee and their love flaming anew, they plan to be married. The immediate departure of the troops, however, prevents this.

Phil's regiment is sent to the front soon after arriving in France and Phil is detailed on an extremely dangerous mission. Returning with important information he is wounded and Rod is killed trying to save his friend. Phil wakes in a hospital and receives the croix de guerre for bravery. Letters from his mother and Natlee only depress him.

At length he rejoins his outfit in the Argonne woods, but he looks so ill that he is sent to a motor school in the south of France. Three days after his arrival, armistice is declared.

ANNE PLANS TO SEEK PHILLIP

THE order came on Christmas Day for Phil to go up into Germany, but it was not to his old outfit.

It was good, nevertheless, to be among the Americans again, for he was a part of the victorious army that was stationed at Coblenz and near about. He wrote to his mother and Natlee, but he had been moved about so much he was not sure they had gotten his letters—at least he had not heard from them since he left the hospital.

Many a German girl attracted by his smile told him, sometimes in words and sometimes by actions, that she was ready to practice Christian charity and forgive her enemy.

Phillip Wynne Tracy IV, however, told himself that his flirting days were over. Not one of these flaxon-haired girls ever gave him the intimation of the slightest thrill.

Once in a while one of them whose hair was yellower than the others would make him think of the lovely corn-silk bands about Natlee's head, and he would long once again to let his fingers thread its soft mass.

He picked up some lovely Russian lapis lazuli beads and a pair of earrings because he thought they would match Natlee's eyes.

For them he gave the last dollar he had, for he had not had any money from home since he left America. If his mother had sent it it had miscarried.

Again he was ashamed to hang around when the mail was distributed. He grew to feel that there was something almost sinister about his name, which made it one no one wished to repeat.

At last one day, on the bulletin board, he read that a number of young American soldiers who had had two years of college and who could produce 250 francs could have five months' work at one of the different universities in England and France.

How he wished he had made up his conditions and entered the university at Christmas, as his mother had wanted him to do. How he wished he had really saved the money he had paid for the lapis lazuli beads he had purchased for Natlee.

However, Phillip had never been discouraged by any obstacles if he wished to do anything very much.

He made his application, saying that he had the requisite requirements and education.

"It is perfectly preposterous to think for a moment that among the other boys in my regiment I will be singled out from those who deserve it more," he said to himself cynically, "but it will be amusing to see hoy many lies I can make up for myself."

ANNE HUNTINGTON TRACY all her life dreaded when the anniversary of Armistice Day came around, for on the day that the war was declared over she was in the Walter Reid hospital at Washington, only conscious that the whole world was determined to make as much noise as possible.

"Tell them to be still!" she would shriek with her hands over her ears. "Tell them to be still. I cannot bear it."

Her nurse tried to tell her that all Washington was holding jubilee because the guns had stopped firing and the killing of human beings had ceased—but Anne Tracy did not understand.

"The noise is killing me. Please ask them to stop," she kept begging.

For three days she had been delirious with flu, and the glorious thrill which came from seeing thousands upon thousands of men and women going mad with joy, she did not know.

Even after the flu had run its course, her brain, overtaxed with the agony of suspense, refused to function normally.

Every noise that could not be kept from her room seemed to be torture to her. She repeated constantly, "Tell them to stop the machine guns"—or "the shell"—as the noise might be heavy or slight.

She had intervals when she would ask quite sanely, "Have you heard from Phil since he went back to the Argonne?" Then before they could answer her mind would wander, and she might speak as though the war was something she knew nothing about.

It was the last of January before Major Aukland or any one else was able to see her.

Then he had to take to her the distressing news that nothing had been heard from her son since the armistice.

"I do not think anything has happened to Phil, Anne," he said, "but I have been trying very hard to get some news from him ever since you have been ill."

The pale and wasted woman on the bed turned such anguished eyes upon him that he fairly picked her up in his arms saying, "Dear, dearest Anne, as soon as you are able, I will take you to Germany, for that is probably where he is. Anne, it breaks my heart to see you grieve. Will you not let me comfort you a little? Anne, dear, you know there has never been another woman in my life but you. I loved you before you married the father of your boy. Anne, be my wife, and we will go together to hunt him.

"You have years before you in which to be happy. Let me help to make them so," he pleaded.

"John, you are more than good to me," she said gently. "I am afraid I have spoiled your life. But for me, you might now have had wife and children."

"Dear Anne, do you not know that you are worth waiting for? Say that you will make me wait no longer. Let us be married immediately."

"I know why you are urging haste, John. In your unselfish love, you want to take care of me. I confess that being taken care of looks very good to me, but I cannot marry anyone until my boy is found.

"Think, dear, I may find him maimed in such a way that he will need my whole care. If that should be so, I could not ask you to share it with me, for I must not keep from you the fact that although I am very fond of you, yet Phillip will always come first."

"But, dearest Anne, what if you find your son perfectly well? Do you not know that some time, sooner or later he will leave you for some young girl? Anne, you have been alone all your life, and yet you are the one woman I have ever met who enjoys—yes, needs — companionship most.

"Darling, don't send me away from you again. I know I can make you happy."

MAJOR Aukland had been holding her in his arms as he would a child. Her head was on his breast. Now he laid her back gently and pulled the covers up under her chin.

Anne found his care and sympathy very comfortable. With a sigh almost of content she cuddled down into her pillows.

Major Aukland sat down beside her bed and took the one hand which was lying inertly outside the coverlet in his.

"Then, dear, I can begin to make arrangements to leave on the Mauretania the last of next week. With me to take care of you on the trip across, I know you will be well enough to go. I'll see the doctor now."

He started toward the door.

"Wait, John," Anne's voice, though weak, was decisive. The man came back to the bed and stood looking down upon her.

"I hope I will be well enough to start across the last of next week, but John, dear John, please do not press me for my answer until I have seen Phillip."

"You do not care for me, Anne?"

"Yes, dear, I do, but neither you nor I would be happy if Phil did not approve."

"He has no right to object," broke in the major, hotly. "For 20 years you have given up your life for him. Now you owe something to yourself."

"I am not quite sure, John, just what you mean by 'you owe something to yourself.' Do you mean that I must try and be happy? You should know that I could not be even content if I were estranged in any way from Phil. No, I do not mean that exactly, for I may not approve of his opinions or his actions in the future any more than I have done in the past, but I probably will not let him know it.

"In the short time I was married to his father I made the mistake of letting him see that I disapproved. I have come to the conclusion that even now, after the war, we women must still get from the men we love the things we want by our personality—which I am hearing a great many people call our 'sex appeal'—or by our diplomacy—never by the reason and righteousness of our desires.

"John, this little visit we have had this morning has been rather tragic, for it has shown me, and it must have shown you also, that we are old.

"When one reasons over the right or wrong of love, one is too old to love singly—or if young, it shows one is not interested.

"If we had been young, you would have picked me up and carried me away by the sheer force of your passion instead of talking it over with me as you have done. Get me the tickets for the trip, dear John, but let it be on some boat which sails a day or two after the Mauretania. We will meet in Paris."

"And I shall lose out, dear Anne, with the son, as I did years ago when we were young—with the father. However, I'll do as you wish, dear, and if I cannot have you for my wife, I will never put any other woman in the place I have always wanted you to fill."

John Aukland bent over Anne and lightly kissed her hair and left the room. As Anne turned away that the nurse might not see her face, she thought, "Oh, John, I wish you had kissed my lips and taken me in spite of any objections I might have made."

BAD MOVIES, MAMA SPANK!

BALLABOOSA, Ga.—Mrs. Mary H. Lloyd, who is 80 years old, understands now what is wrong with the younger generation. For four score years she got along without going to the movies. The other evening she attended her first motion picture performance, and the wickedness of the world was at once made plain. "No wonder girls are wild," said Mrs. Lloyd after the show. "If I had a daughter who went to any such place as a motion picture theater I'd turn her over my knee and spank her." The picture which so aroused the matriarch's wrath was Harry Langdon's comedy, "The Strong Man." It was produced under the auspices of the local W. C. T. U.
